Disraeli /dɪz'reɪlɪ/, Benjamin, 1st Earl of Beaconsfield (1804–81), British Tory statesman, of Italian–Jewish descent: Prime Minister 1868 and 1874–80. He played a dominant role in the reconstruction of the Tory Party after Sir Robert Peel, guiding it away from protectionism and generating enthusiasm for the British Empire. He was largely responsible for the introduction of the second Reform Act (1867), which doubled the electorate. In his second term as Prime Minister he ensured that Britain bought a controlling interest in the Suez Canal (1875) and also made Queen Victoria Empress of India. At home his government passed much useful social legislation, including measures to improve public health and working conditions in factories. He wrote a number of novels, including Coningsby (1844) and Sybil (1845), which drew on his experience of political life.

DNA /ˌdi:en'eɪ/ abbr. Biol. deoxyribonucleic acid, a substance present in nearly all living organisms, esp. as a constituent of chromosomes. DNA molecules carry the genetic information necessary for the organization and functioning of most living cells and control the inheritance of characteristics (see GENE). The structure of DNA was first proposed by J. D. Watson and F. H. C. Crick in 1953: each molecule consists of two strands coiled round each other to form a double helix, a structure like a spiral ladder. Each 'rung' of the ladder consists of a pair of chemical groups called bases (of which there are four types). The genetic information is carried in the form of particular base sequences which control the manufacture of proteins needed by the cell; genes are 'copied' in the nucleus into the similar RNA, which then passes out into the cytoplasm and forms a template for the synthesis of enzymes and other proteins. The DNA molecule also has the special property of self-replication: the strands separate and each provides a template for the synthesis of a new complementary strand with which it recombines, thus producing two identical copies of the original double helix.

- The dog family is characterized by limbs adapted for running, great stamina, and an acute sense of smell, suitable for chasing prey by chasing it until it tires. The dog was domesticated early in the neolithic period: its chief wild ancestor was the wolf, Canis lupus, but the golden jackal, C. aureus, may also have been involved. The social habits of the wolf made it particularly suitable for domestication, and the dog usually regards its owner as the ‘pack leader’. Such wild dogs as the dingo are actually feral domestic dogs, but the African hunting dog and the Asiatic wild dog (or dhole) are separate and more distantly related species.

[LG daler f. G Taler, short for Joachimstaler, a coin from the silver-mine of Joachimstal, now Jáchymov in the Czech Republic]

▪ The dollar's ancestors were the Spanish peso (widely used as currency in North and South America in the 17th–18th centuries) and the Bohemian Joachimsthaler of the early 16th century. The Spanish dollar was formally retained as the standard unit of currency (with decimal subdivisions) in 1785. The first true American dollar was minted in 1794, but Spanish dollars continued in use and remained legal tender until 1857. The origin of the dollar sign $ is uncertain; it may be a modification of the figure 8 (representing 8 reals, the value of the peso), with upright strokes symbolizing the two architectural columns (representing the Pillars of Hercules), which for several centuries were conspicuous on the obverse of the Spanish peso.

Dominic, St /ˈdomɪnɪk/ (*c.*1170–1221), (Spanish name Domingo de Guzmán) Spanish priest and friar. In 1203 he began a mission to reconcile the Albigenses to the Church. Although largely unsuccessful in this aim he established a number of religious communities and undertook the training of preachers; in 1216 this led to the foundation of the Order of Friars Preachers (see DOMINICAN^1) at Toulouse in France. At one time St Dominic was believed to have originated the practice of saying the rosary, but this belief has now been discredited. Feast day, 8 Aug.

Dominica /ˌdomɪˈniːkə, dəˈmɪnɪkə/ a mountainous island in the West Indies, the loftiest of the Lesser Antilles and the northernmost and largest of the Windward Islands; pop. (est. 1991) 72,000; languages, English (official), Creole; capital, Roseau. The island, originally inhabited by Caribs, was named by Columbus, who encountered it on a Sunday (L dies domenica the Lord's day) in 1493. After much Anglo-French rivalry it came into British possession at the end of the 18th century, becoming an independent republic within the Commonwealth in 1978.

- The Dominican order (whose members are also called Black Friars, after the colour of their cloak) was founded by St Dominic in 1215–16, and followed the established Rule of St Augustine. Dominicans are specially devoted to preaching and study and their chief motivation was, and is, educational and missionary. During the Middle Ages they supplied many leaders of European thought, including St Albertus Magnus and St Thomas Aquinas; they were also involved in the Inquisition. Although they became less prominent with the rise of new orders at the time of the Reformation (especially the Jesuits, often their rivals), they have retained considerable influence as champions of Roman Catholic orthodoxy.

▪ The dragon is probably the commonest emblem in the art of the Far East, and the most ancient. A form with five claws on each foot (oriental dragons normally have four) was adopted as the chief imperial emblem in China. The dragon represented fertilizing power and cosmic energy and tended to live in water; in springtime it moved in heaven among the clouds. While the dragon of the Far East is largely beneficent, in the Christian art of the West it has often been a symbol of threat and destruction, as well as paganism, as illustrated by the legend of St George slaying the dragon.

Dreyfus /ˈdreɪfəs/, Alfred (1859–1935), French army officer, of Jewish descent. In 1894 he was falsely accused of providing military secrets to the Germans; his trial, imprisonment, and eventual rehabilitation in 1906 caused a major political crisis in France, polarizing deep-set anti-militarist and anti-Semitic trends in a society still coming to terms with defeat and revolution in 1870–1. Notable among his supporters was the novelist Émile Zola, whose J'accuse, published in 1898, accused the judges at the trial of having convicted Dreyfus at the behest of the War Office.

Druidism. □ Druidism n. Druidic /dru:ˈɪdɪk/ adj. Druidical adj. [F druide or L pl. druidae, -des, Gk druidai f. Gaulish druides]

- Knowledge of the Druids is based chiefly on the hostile accounts of them in the writings of Julius Caesar and Tacitus. Caesar reports that they had judicial and priestly functions, and were proficient in physical science; they also worshipped in groves (clearings in the forest), cut mistletoe from the sacred oak with a golden sickle, and were believed to offer human sacrifices. The religion was stamped out by the Romans with unrelenting ferocity. Druidism of the Roman period may well have contained elements of older faiths and, although its association with Stonehenge is now generally rejected, the modern Druidical order seeks to make ceremonial use of this and other sites.

Dryden /ˈdraɪd(ə)n/, John (1631–1700), English poet, dramatist, and critic. One of the principal exponents of Augustan literature in England, he is remembered for his codification of verse metres and the establishment of the heroic couplet as the favoured verse form. He wrote many plays, including comedies (Marriage à la mode; 1673), tragedies such as the blank verse drama All for Love (1678), and satires, of which the best known is Absalom and Achitophel (1681). His prose writing style is often considered the model for modern English literature. Many of his critical works appear as prefaces to his plays; they include Of Dramatic Poesie (1668).

- Dutch belongs to the Germanic language group and is most closely related to German and English; as well as being used by the 15 million inhabitants of the Netherlands, it is also the official language of Suriname and the Netherlands Antilles. In addition, it is spoken in northern Belgium, where it is called Flemish. The English word Dutch originally denoted speakers of both High and Low German and is cognate with the German word Deutsch. After the United Provinces became an independent state in 1579, using the Low German of Holland as the national language, the English term was gradually restricted to the language and people of the Netherlands.

▪ The ear of a mammal is composed of three parts, the outer, middle, and inner ears. The outer ear is the external part consisting of a fleshy flap or pinna that concentrates the sound and is often movable, and a tube leading to the eardrum or tympanum. The middle ear is an air-filled cavity connected to the throat, containing three small linked bones (the incus, malleus, and stapes) that transmit vibrations from the eardrum to the inner ear. This is a complex fluid-filled labyrinth that includes the spiral cochlea (where vibrations are converted to nerve impulses) and the three semicircular canals (constituting the organ of balance). The ears of other vertebrates are broadly similar, though lacking some of the components, and many insects also have organs for detecting sound.

Gmc]

- The earth is the third planet from the sun in the solar system, orbiting between Venus and Mars at an average distance of 149.6 million km from the sun, and has one natural satellite, the moon. It has an equatorial diameter of 12,756 km, an average density 5.5 times that of water, and is believed to have formed about 4,600 million years ago. The earth, which is three-quarters covered by oceans and has a dense atmosphere of nitrogen and oxygen, is the only planet known to support life. The interior contains three concentric regions: core, mantle, and crust. The rocky crust, which forms the surface of the solid earth, is only a few kilometres thick, although thicker beneath the continents than beneath the oceans. The mantle, extending to a depth of roughly 3,000 km, consists mainly of silicate rocks, and constitutes the bulk of the earth's volume. Beneath it is the core, which extends to the centre of the earth and consists largely of iron and nickel; its outer part is liquid and is thought to be the seat of the earth's magnetic field.

earthquake /ˈɜːθkweɪk/ n. 1 a convulsive shaking or movement of the earth's surface. (See note below.) 2 a social etc. disturbance.

- While gentle earth tremors can occur in any region of the globe, major earthquakes are generally confined to particular active regions of the earth's crust. These correspond to the edges of the crustal plates, and most earthquakes are due to the release of strain energy associated with the relative motions of the plates. The focus of such an earthquake can be as deep as about 700 km; earthquakes associated with volcanic activity are much shallower. The magnitude of earthquakes is expressed by the Richter scale, destructive earthquakes generally measuring between about 7 and 9.

▪ Ecology is a relatively new science; the word is said to have been coined by E. H. Haeckel in 1869. It may be concerned with the study of a single species in its environment, or of a complete ecosystem. Aspects that are investigated by ecologists include the dynamics and distribution of populations, the interactions between species, the effects of the physical environment, and the energy flow through the system. The study of human environmental impact is forming an increasingly important part of ecology.

Economic and Social Committee (abbr. ESC) a consultative body of the European Community, set up in 1957 to represent the interests of the Community's citizens and composed of representatives of the member states. It meets in Brussels.

economics /ˌi:kə'nɒmɪks, ˌek-/ n.pl. (often treated as sing.) the science of the production and distribution of wealth. Early schools of economics, principally mercantilism, were concerned chiefly with a nation's balance of trade and with the amount of precious metal held; they often resulted simply in protectionism. Criticism of mercantilism came from the philosopher David Hume and the French physiocrats, who advocated free trade and believed that government should be limited to the preservation of the natural order. Such laissez-faire or free-market ideas were taken up by Adam Smith, often regarded as the founder of modern economics. His work formed the basis of the classical economics of the 19th century, in which the central tenet was competition and in which the law of supply and demand was expected to regulate the prices of commodities satisfactorily. These ideas held sway until the 1930s, when John Maynard Keynes attempted to address the problems of the Depression by opposing the classical ideal of the balanced budget, arguing that government spending, financed by borrowing, was necessary to provide full employment. Keynes's theories were enormously influential for forty years, but were later criticized as tending to lead to inflation. In the 1970s and 1980s monetarism became influential in the West and was utilized by governments intent on fighting inflation. With the collapse of the centrally planned economies of the former Soviet bloc, the free market has held increasing sway, although monetarist ideas have attracted criticism as leading to unemployment.

Edmonton /'edməntən/ the capital of Alberta, Canada; pop. (1991) 703,070.

Edmund /'edmənd/ the name of two kings of England:

Edmund I (921–46), reigned 939–46. Soon after Edmund succeeded Athelstan, a Norse army took control of York and its dependent territories. From 941 Edmund set about recovering these northern territories, but after his death Northumbria fell again under Norse control.

Edmund II (known as Edmund Ironside) (*c.*980–1016), son of Ethelred the Unready, reigned 1016. Edmund led the resistance to Canute's forces in 1015 and on his father's death was proclaimed king. After some initial success he was defeated at Ashingdon in Essex (1016) and was forced to divide the kingdom with Canute, retaining only Wessex. On Edmund's death Canute became king of all England.

Edmund, St (born Edmund Rich) (*c.*1175–1240), English churchman and teacher. Archbishop of Canterbury 1234–40, he was the last Primate of all England and the first Oxford University teacher to be canonized. The Oxford college St Edmund Hall takes its name from him. Feast day, 16 Nov.

Edmund Campion, St see CAMPION, ST EDMUND.

Edmund Ironside /'aɪən,saɪd/ Edmund II of England (see EDMUND).

Edmund the Martyr, St (*c.*841–70), king of East Anglia 855–70. After the defeat of his army by the invading Danes in 870, tradition holds that he was captured and shot with arrows for refusing to reject the Christian faith or to share power with his pagan conqueror. His body was interred at Bury St Edmunds, Suffolk. Feast day, 20 Nov.

Edw. abbr. Edward.

Edward /'edwəd/ the name of six kings of England since the Norman Conquest and also one of Great Britain and Ireland and one of the United Kingdom:

Edward I (known as 'the Hammer of the Scots') (1239–1307), son of Henry III, reigned 1272–1307. After coming to the throne Edward did much to improve the ineffectual central administration he had inherited; this included summoning the Model Parliament (1295). His campaign against the Welsh Prince Llewelyn ended with the annexation of Wales in 1284. He failed to conquer Scotland, though he had a successful first campaign there in 1296, deposing the Scottish king, John de Baliol (*c.*1250–1313), who had made an alliance with the French against him. From 1297 to 1305 the Scots were in a state of armed insurrection, initially under the leadership of Sir William Wallace. Edward died on his way north to begin a new campaign against the Scots, who were now led by Robert the Bruce.

Edward II (1284–1327), son of Edward I, reigned 1307–27. The first English Prince of Wales, he soon proved unequal to the problems left him by his more military father, and early trouble with his barons led to civil war. In 1314 he invaded Scotland, only to be defeated by Robert the Bruce at Bannockburn in the same year. In 1326 Edward's wife, Isabella of France, allied herself with the exiled Roger de Mortimer to invade England. Edward was deposed in favour of his son and was murdered at Berkeley Castle, Gloucestershire.

Edward III (1312–77), son of Edward II, reigned 1327–77. In 1330 Edward ended the four-year regency of his mother Isabella and her lover Roger de Mortimer by taking control of his kingdom, banishing Isabella, and executing Mortimer. He supported Edward de Baliol (*c.*1283–1364), the pretender to the Scottish throne, and started the Hundred Years War with France by claiming the French throne in right of his mother (1337). Towards the end of his reign, effective government fell into the hands of his fourth son, John of Gaunt.

Edward IV (1442–83), son of Richard, Duke of York, reigned 1461–83. He became king after defeating the Lancastrian king Henry VI in battle in 1461. The early years of his reign were troubled by Lancastrian plots, but the most serious threat arose in 1470–1 as a result of an alliance between his old Lancastrian enemies and his disaffected former lieutenant, the Earl of Warwick. Edward was briefly forced into exile, but returned to crush his opponents at Tewkesbury (1471).

Edward V (1470–*c.*1483), son of Edward IV, reigned 1483, but was not crowned. Following his father's death, he was illegitimized on debatable evidence of the illegality of Edward IV's marriage: his throne was taken by his uncle, Richard III. (See PRINCES IN THE TOWER.)

Edward VI (1537–53), son of Henry VIII, reigned 1547–53. During his brief reign as a minor, England was effectively ruled by two protectors, the Duke of Somerset and the Duke of Northumberland. Nevertheless, the king's Protestant beliefs contributed significantly to the establishment of Protestantism as the state religion, especially with the publication of the Book of Common Prayer (1549). He was succeeded by his elder sister, Mary I.

Edward VII (1841–1910), son of Queen Victoria, reigned 1901–10. Edward was kept away from the conduct of royal affairs during the long reign of his mother. Although he played little part in government on finally coming to the throne, his popularity and willingness to make public appearances, both at home and abroad, helped revitalize the monarchy.

Edward VIII (1894–1972), son of George V, reigned 1936, but was not crowned. A popular Prince of Wales, Edward abdicated eleven months after coming to the throne in order to marry the American divorcee Mrs Wallis Simpson. Created Duke of Windsor, he served as Governor-General of the Bahamas during the Second World War before spending the rest of his life in France.

Edward, Lake a lake on the border between Uganda and Zaire. It is linked to Lake Albert by the Semliki river. Sir Henry Morton Stanley named the lake as Albert Edward Nyanza after Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, in 1889.

Edward, Prince, Edward Antony Richard Louis (b.1964), Earl of Wessex, third son of Elizabeth II. He served in the Royal Marines from 1986 to 1987 after graduating from Cambridge, and has more recently worked in the theatre and television. He married Sophie Rhys-Jones (b. 1965) in 1999.

Edward, Prince of Wales see BLACK PRINCE.

Edwardian /ed'wɔːdɪən/ adj. & n. ● adj. of, characteristic of, or associated with the reign (1901–10) of King Edward VII. ● n. a person belonging to this period.

Edwards /'edwədz/, Gareth (Owen) (b.1947), Welsh Rugby Union player. His international career, during which he played chiefly at half-back, lasted from 1967 to 1978. He was appointed captain of the Welsh team in 1968, the youngest person ever to hold that position.

Edward the Confessor, St (*c.*1003–66), son of Ethelred the Unready, king of England 1042–66. Famed for his piety, Edward founded Westminster Abbey, where he was eventually buried. He was dominated through much of his reign by his wife's father, Earl Godwin (d.1053). In later years Edward took less interest in affairs of state, letting effective control fall to Godwin's son, who eventually succeeded him as Harold II. He was canonized in 1161. Feast day, 13 Oct.

Edward the Elder (*c.*870–924), son of Alfred the Great, king of Wessex 899–924. During his reign he conquered lands previously held by the Danes, including East Anglia and the Midlands; on the death of his sister, the ruler of Mercia, in 918 he merged the kingdoms of Wessex and Mercia. His conquests made it possible for his son Athelstan to become the first king of all England in 925.

Edward the Martyr, St (*c.*963–78), son of Edgar, king of England 975–8. Shortly after his accession, the youthful Edward was faced by a challenge for the throne from supporters of his half-brother Ethelred, who eventually had him murdered at Corfe Castle, Dorset (978). Canonized in 1001, he became the subject of an important medieval cult. Feast day, 18 Mar.

Edwy /'edwɪ/ (also Eadwig /'edwɪg/) (d.959), king of England 955–7. He was probably only 15 years old when he became king. Edwy alienated a large part of his kingdom during his short reign; after Mercia and Northumbria had renounced him in favour of his brother Edgar in 957, he ruled only over the lands south of the Thames.

Egypt /ˈiːdʒɪpt/ a country in NE Africa bordering on the Mediterranean Sea; pop. (est. 1991) 53,087,000; official language, Arabic; capital, Cairo. The population of Egypt is concentrated chiefly along the fertile valley of the River Nile, the rest of the country being largely desert. Egypt's history spans 5,000 years, dating back to the neolithic period. The ancient kingdoms of Upper and Lower Egypt became united, according to tradition, under Menes (*c.*3100 BC), founder of the first of the thirty-one dynasties which successively ruled ancient Egypt. The period of the Old Kingdom (*c.*2575–2134 BC, 4th–8th dynasty), the 'Pyramid Age', was characterized by strong central government, based at Memphis. The Middle Kingdom (*c.*2040–1640 BC, 11th–14th dynasty) is considered to be the classical age of ancient Egyptian culture; the period ended with the Hyksos usurpation. The New Kingdom (*c.*1550–1070 BC, 18th–20th dynasty), with its capital at Thebes, began with the expulsion of the Hyksos (who had formed the 15th and 16th dynasties) and was marked by imperial expansion in Syria, Palestine, and Nubia. A period of decline followed, and indigenous rule was finally ended by Alexander the Great, who took Egypt in 332 BC. For the next three centuries the country, and particularly Alexandria, was a major centre of Hellenistic culture. On the death of Cleopatra (30 BC), Egypt became a Roman province. It fell under Islamic rule in 642, from 1517 forming part of the Ottoman Empire except for a brief period (1798–1801) under French rule following Napoleon's invasion. The opening of the Suez Canal in 1869 made Egypt strategically important, and when the Turks became allies of Germany in the First World War the British (who had installed themselves following a nationalist revolt in 1882) declared the country a British protectorate. Independence was declared in 1922 and a kingdom was established, becoming a republic after the overthrow of the monarchy in 1953. From 1958 to 1961 Egypt was united with Syria as the United Arab Republic, a title it retained until 1971. Wars with Israel were fought in 1967 (the Six Day War) and 1973 (the Yom Kippur or October War); the countries signed a peace treaty in 1979.

Einstein /'aɪnstaɪn/, Albert (1879–1955), German-born American theoretical physicist, founder of the theory of relativity, often regarded as the greatest scientist of the 20th century. In 1905 he published outstanding papers dealing with the photoelectric effect, Brownian motion, and his special theory of relativity (see RELATIVITY). In 1915, he succeeded in incorporating gravitation in his general theory of relativity, which was vindicated when one of its predictions was observed during the solar eclipse of 1919. He was in America when Hitler came to power in 1933 and decided to stay there, spending the remainder of his life searching without success for a unified field theory embracing electromagnetism, gravitation, relativity, and quantum mechanics. In 1939 he wrote to President Roosevelt about the military potential of nuclear energy, greatly influencing the decision to build an atom bomb. After the war he spoke out passionately against nuclear weapons.

eldest /ˈeldɪst/ adj. & n. ● adj. first-born or oldest surviving (member of a family, son, daughter, etc.). ● n. (often prec. by the) the eldest of three or more indicated (who is the eldest?). □ eldest hand Cards the first player. [OE (as ELDER^1)]

El Djem /el ˈdʒem/ a town in eastern Tunisia, noted for its well-preserved Roman amphitheatre.

El Dorado /ˌel dəˈroːdəʊ/ the name of a fictitious country (or city) abounding in gold, believed to exist somewhere in the region of the Orinoco and Amazon rivers. The belief, which led Spanish conquistadors to converge on the area in search of treasure and Sir Walter Raleigh to lead his second expedition up the Orinoco, appears to have originated in rumours of an Indian ruler who ritually coated his body with gold dust and then plunged into a sacred lake while his subjects threw in gold and jewels. [Sp., = the gilded] eldorado /ˌeldəˈroːdəʊ/ n. (pl. -os) 1 any imaginary country or city abounding in gold. 2 a place of great abundance. [EL DORADO] eldritch /ˈeldrɪtʃ/ adj. Sc. 1 supernatural. 2 hideous. [16th c.: perh. f. OE elfrīce (unrecorded) ‘fairy realm’]

Eleanor Cross /ˈelɪnə(r)/ any of the stone crosses erected by Edward I to mark the stopping-places of the cortège that brought the body of his queen, Eleanor of Castile (1246–90), from Nottinghamshire to London in 1290. Three of the twelve crosses survive.

Eleanor of Aquitaine /'elɪnə(r)/ (*c.*1122–1204), daughter of the Duke of Aquitaine, queen of France 1137–52 and of England 1154–89. She was married to Louis VII of France (*c.*1120–80) from 1137; in 1152, with the annulment of their marriage, she married the future Henry II of England. Her ten children included the monarchs Richard I (Richard the Lion-heart) and John, whose accession she strove to secure. She acted as regent (1190–4), while Richard was away on the Crusades.

Eleatic /ˌelɪ'ætɪk/ adj. & n. ● adj. of Elea, an ancient Greek city in SW Italy, or the school of philosophers which flourished there in about the 5th century BC, which included Xenophanes, Parmenides, and Zeno. ● n. an Eleatic philosopher.

elecampane /ˌelɪkæm'peɪn/ n. a sunflower-like composite plant, Inula helenium, with bitter aromatic leaves and roots, used in herbal medicine and cookery. [corrupt. of med.L enula (for L inula f. Gk helenion) campana (prob. = of the fields)] elect /ɪ'lekt/ v., adj., & n. ● v.tr. (usu. foll. by to + infin.) 1 choose (the principles they elected to follow). 2 choose (a person) by vote (elected a new chairman). 3 (in Christian theology) (of God) choose (persons) in preference to others for salvation. ● adj. 1 chosen. 2 select, choice. 3 (in Christian theology) chosen by God. 4 (in comb., after a noun designating office) chosen but not yet in office (president-elect). ● n. (prec. by the) those chosen by God for salvation. □ electable adj. [ME f. L electus past part. of eligere elect- (as E-, legere pick)] election /ɪ'lekʃ(ə)n/ n. 1 the process of electing or being elected, esp. of members of a political body. 2 the act or an instance of electing. 3 (in Christian theology) God's choice of some persons in preference to others for salvation. In medieval times the nature and conditions of election were much disputed. They later formed a fundamental issue in the teaching of Calvin, who held that God's choice was wholly without relation to faith or good works. [ME f. OF f. L electio -onis (as ELECT)] electioneer /ɪˌlekʃə'nɪə(r)/ v. & n. ● v.intr. 1 take part in an election campaign. 2 derog. act in a way calculated to appeal to voters. ● n. a person who electioneers. □ electioneering n.

elective /ɪ'lektɪv/ adj. & n. ● adj. 1 a (of an office or its holder) filled or appointed by election. b (of authority) derived from election. 2 (of a body) having the power to elect. 3 having a tendency to act on or be concerned with some things rather than others (elective affinity). 4 (of a course of study) chosen by the student; optional. 5 (of a surgical operation etc.) optional; not urgently necessary. ● n. US an elective course of study. □ electively adv. [F électif -ive f. LL electivus (as ELECT)] elector /ɪ'lektə(r)/ n. 1 a person who has the right of voting to elect an MP etc. 2 (Elector) hist. a German prince entitled to take part in the election of the emperor. 3 US a member of an electoral college. □ electorship n. [ME f. F électeur f. L elector (as ELECT)] electoral /ɪ'lektərəl/ adj. relating to or ranking as electors. □ electoral college 1 a body of persons representing the states of the US, who cast votes for the election of the President. 2 a body of electors. electoral roll (or register) an official list of those in a district, parish, etc., entitled to vote. □ electorally adv.

electorate /ɪ'lektərət/ n. 1 a body of electors. 2 Austral. & NZ an area represented by one member of parliament. 3 hist. the office or territories of a German Elector.

Electra /ɪ'lektrə/ Gk Mythol. the daughter of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra. She persuaded her brother Orestes to kill Clytemnestra and Aegisthus (their mother's lover) in revenge for the murder of Agamemnon. □ Electra complex Psychol. a daughter's subconscious sexual attraction to her father and hostility towards her mother, corresponding to the Oedipus complex in a son.

electret /ɪ'lektrɪt/ n. Physics a permanently polarized piece of dielectric material, analogous to a permanent magnet. [ELECTRICITY + MAGNET] electric /ɪ'lektrɪk/ adj. & n. ● adj. 1 of, worked by, or charged with electricity; producing or capable of generating electricity. 2 causing or charged with sudden and dramatic excitement (the news had an electric effect; the atmosphere was electric). ● n. 1 an electric light, vehicle, etc. 2 (in pl.) electrical equipment. □ electric blanket a blanket that can be heated electrically by an internal element. electric blue a steely or brilliant light blue. electric chair an electrified chair used for capital punishment. electric eel an eel-like freshwater fish, Electrophorus electricus, native to South America, that can give a severe electric shock. electric eye colloq. a photoelectric cell operating a relay when the beam of light illuminating it is obscured. electric fence a fence charged with electricity, often consisting of one strand. electric field a region of electrical influence. electric fire an electrically operated incandescent or convector heater, usu. portable and for domestic use. electric guitar a guitar with a built-in electrical sound pick-up rather than a soundbox. electric organ 1 Biol. an organ in some fishes able to produce an electrical discharge for stunning prey or sensing the surroundings, or as a defence. 2 Mus. an electrically operated organ. electric ray a ray of the family Torpedinidae, that can give an electric shock. electric shaver (or razor) an electrical device for shaving, with oscillating or rotating blades behind a metal guard. electric shock the effect of a sudden discharge of electricity on a person or animal, usually with stimulation of the nerves and contraction of the muscles. electric storm a violent disturbance of the electrical condition of the atmosphere. □ electrically adv. [mod.L electricus f. L electrum f. Gk ēlektron amber, the rubbing of which causes electrostatic phenomena] electrical /ɪ'lektrɪk(ə)l/ adj. 1 of or concerned with or of the nature of electricity. 2 operating by electricity. 3 = ELECTRIC 2.

electrician /ˌɪlek'trɪʃ(ə)n, ˌel-/ n. a person who installs or maintains electrical equipment, esp. professionally.

electricity /ˌɪlek'trɪsɪtɪ, ˌel-/ n. 1 a form of energy resulting from the existence of charged particles (electrons, protons, etc.), either statically as an accumulation of charge or dynamically as a current. (See note below.) 2 the branch of physics dealing with electricity. 3 a supply of electric current for heating, lighting, etc. (See note below.) 4 a state of heightened emotion; excitement, tension.

- It was known in ancient times that a piece of dry amber, rubbed with a cloth, developed the power of attracting small pieces of paper. In the late 16th century William Gilbert showed that other substances could be electrified by friction, and seems to have been the first to use the Latin word electrum (amber) to refer to the phenomenon. In the 18th century it was discovered that there are two opposite kinds of electricity, which Benjamin Franklin arbitrarily named positive and negative. Like charges repel each other and unlike charges attract. However the nature of electricity still remained a mystery until the late 19th century when J. J. Thomson located negative electricity in subatomic particles called electrons; positive electricity was found to reside in larger particles, protons, in the atomic nucleus. Electric currents were shown to be flows of electrons. Electric forces are responsible for binding protons and electrons together in atoms, binding atoms together to form matter, and for many other natural phenomena, from lightning to the transmission of nerve impulses.
- The town of Godalming in Surrey, England, was the first in the world to have electricity supplied for public and private use, in a three-year experiment from 1881; the electricity supply was generated at first by water-power, then by a steam engine. The first successful electric lamps were developed almost simultaneously by Joseph Swan in England and Thomas Edison in America in 1879. Use of electrical power in homes and factories did not become common until the years between the two world wars.

electrify /ɪ'lektrɪˌfaɪ/ v.tr. (-ies, -ied) 1 charge (a body) with electricity. 2 convert (machinery or the place or system employing it) to the use of electric power. 3 cause dramatic or sudden excitement in. □ electrifier n. electrification /ɪˌlektrɪfɪ'keɪʃ(ə)n/ n.

electro- /ɪ'lektrəʊ/ comb. form of, relating to, or caused by electricity (electrocute; electromagnet). [Gk ēlektron amber: see ELECTRIC] electro-acoustic /ɪˌlektrəʊə'ku:stɪk/ adj. 1 involving the direct conversion of electrical into acoustic energy or vice versa. 2 (of music) performed or composed with the creative use of electronic equipment.

electrobiology /ɪˌlektrəʊbaɪ'ɒlədʒɪ/ n. the study of the electrical phenomena of living things.

electrocardiogram /ɪˌlektrəʊ'kɑ:dɪəˌgræm/ n. a record of the heartbeat traced by an electrocardiograph. [G Elektrocardiogramm (as ELECTRO-, CARDIO-, -GRAM)] electrocardiograph /ɪˌlektrəʊ'kɑ:dɪəˌgrɑ:f/ n. an instrument recording the electric currents generated by the heart. When the heart muscle contracts and relaxes, changes in potential are produced, which can be picked up from the skin surface by sensitive electrodes. The electrical activity of the heart was first recorded by William Einthoven in 1903. □ electrocardiographic /-ˌkɑ:dɪə'græfɪk/ adj. electrocardiography /-ˌkɑ:dɪ'ɒgrəfɪ/ n.

electrochemistry /ɪˌlektrəʊ'kemɪstrɪ/ n. the branch of chemistry concerned with the relations between electrical and chemical phenomena. □ electrochemical adj. electrochemically adv. electrochemist n.

electroconvulsive /ɪˌlektrəʊkən'vʌlsɪv/ adj. (of a therapy) employing the application of electric shocks to the brain of a patient so as to produce a convulsion, used in some treatments for mental illness.

electrocute /ɪ'lektrəˌkjuːt/ v.tr. 1 kill by electricity (as a form of capital punishment). 2 cause the death of by electric shock. □ electrocution /ɪˌlektrə'kjuːʃ(ə)n/ n. [ELECTRO-, after EXECUTE] electrode /ɪ'lektrəʊd/ n. a conductor through which electricity enters or leaves an electrolyte, gas, vacuum, etc. [ELECTRIC + Gk hodos way] electrodialysis /ɪˌlektrəʊdaɪ'ælɪsɪs/ n. dialysis in which the movement of ions is aided by an electric field applied across the semi-permeable membrane.

electrodynamics /ɪˌlektrəʊdaɪ'næmɪks/ n.pl. (usu. treated as sing.) the branch of mechanics concerned with electric current applied to motive forces. □ electrodynamic adj.

electroencephalogram /ɪˌlektrəʊen'sefələˌgræm, -'kefələˌgræm/ n. a record of the brain's activity traced by an electroencephalograph. [G Elektrenkephalogramm (as ELECTRO-, ENCEPHALO-, -GRAM)] electroencephalograph /ɪˌlektrəʊen'sefələˌgrɑːf, -'kefələˌgrɑːf/ n. an instrument recording the electrical activity of the brain. Its use was pioneered in 1929 by Hans Berger. □ electroencephalography /-ˌsefə'lɒgrəfɪ, -ˌkefə-/ n.

electroluminescence /ɪˌlektrəʊˌluːmɪ'nes(ə)ns/ n. luminescence produced electrically, esp. by the application of a voltage. □ electroluminescent adj.

electrolyse /ɪ'lektrəˌlaɪz/ v.tr. (US -yze) subject to or treat by electrolysis. □ electrolyser n. [ELECTROLYSIS after analyse] electrolysis /ˌɪlek'trɒlɪsɪs, ˌel-/ n. 1 Chem. the decomposition of a substance by the application of an electric current. 2 this process applied to the destruction of tumours, hair-roots, etc. □ electrolytic /ɪˌlektrəʊ'lɪtɪk/ adj. electrolytical adj. electrolytically adv. [ELECTRO- + -LYSIS] electrolyte /ɪ'lektrəˌlaɪt/ n. 1 a liquid which contains ions and can be decomposed by electrolysis, esp. that present in a battery. 2 (usu. in pl.) Physiol. the ionized or ionizable constituents of a living cell, blood, or other tissue. [ELECTRO- + Gk lutos released f. luō loosen] electromagnet /ɪˌlektrəʊ'mægnɪt/ n. a soft metal core made into a magnet by the passage of electric current through a coil surrounding it. The first simple electromagnet capable of supporting its own weight was made by William Sturgeon (1783–1850) of Manchester, a self-taught electrical engineer, in 1825.

electromagnetic /ɪˌlektrəʊmæg'netɪk/ adj. having both an electrical and a magnetic character or properties. □ electromagnetic radiation a kind of radiation including visible light, radio waves, gamma rays, X-rays, etc., in which electric and magnetic fields vary simultaneously. electromagnetic spectrum the range of wavelengths over which electromagnetic radiation extends. electromagnetic units a largely disused system of units derived primarily from the magnetic properties of electric currents. □ electromagnetically adv.

electromagnetism /ɪˌlektrəʊ'mægnɪˌtɪz(ə)m/ n. 1 the magnetic forces produced by electricity. 2 the study of this.

- Hans Christian Oersted in 1820 was the first to show that an electric current creates a magnetic field and affects a magnetic compass exactly as an ordinary magnet does. This discovery led to the development of the electromagnet. Electromagnetic phenomenona are the basis of many devices, including electric motors, generators, relays, solenoids, microphones, and loudspeakers.

electromechanical /ɪˌlektrəʊmɪ'kænɪk(ə)l/ adj. relating to the application of electricity to mechanical processes, devices, etc.

electrometer /ˌɪlek'trɒmɪtə(r), ˌel-/ n. an instrument for measuring electrical potential without drawing any current from the circuit. □ electrometry n. electrometric /ɪˌlektrəʊ'metrɪk/ adj.

electromotive /ɪˌlektrəʊ'məʊtɪv/ adj. producing or tending to produce an electric current. □ electromotive force a difference in potential that tends to give rise to an electric current.

electron /ɪ'lektron/ n. a subatomic particle with a unit charge of negative electricity, which is found in all atoms and acts as the primary carrier of electricity in solids. (See note below.) □ electron beam a stream of electrons in a gas or vacuum. electron diffraction the diffraction of a beam of electrons by atoms or molecules, used for determining crystal structures etc. electron gun a device for producing a narrow stream of electrons from a heated cathode. electron lens a device for focusing a stream of electrons by means of electric or magnetic fields. electron pair 1 Chem. two electrons in the same orbital in an atom or molecule. 2 Physics an electron and a positron. electron spin resonance (abbr. ESR) a spectroscopic method of studying electrons within the molecules of a paramagnetic substance. [ELECTRIC + -ON]

- The electron was discovered by J. J. Thomson in his study of cathode rays (1897); the word electron had been coined in 1891 by the Irish mathematical physicist George Johnstone Stoney (1826–1911), though he used it for the unit of charge on a hydrogen ion. The electron's mass is about 9×10^{-28}g, 1,836 times less than that of the proton. Electrons orbit the positively charged nuclei of atoms and are responsible for binding atoms together in molecules, as well as for the electrical, thermal, optical, and magnetic properties of solids. Electric currents in metals and in semiconductors consist of a flow of electrons, and light, radio waves, X-rays, and much heat radiation are all produced by accelerating and decelerating electrons.

electronegative /ɪˌlektrəʊ'negətɪv/ adj. 1 electrically negative. 2 Chem. (of an element) tending to acquire electrons in chemical reactions.

electronic /ˌɪlek'trɒnɪk, ˌel-/ adj. 1 a produced by or involving the flow of electrons. b of or relating to electrons or electronics. 2 (of a device) using electronic components. 3 a (of music) produced by electronic means and usu. recorded on tape. b (of a musical instrument) producing sounds by electronic means. □ electronic flash a flash from a gas-discharge tube, used in high-speed photography. electronic mail messages distributed by electronic means esp. from one computer system to one or more recipients. electronic publishing the publication of books etc. in machine-readable form rather than on paper. electronic tagging the attaching of electronic markers to people, goods, etc., enabling them to be traced. □ electronically adv.

electronics /ˌɪlek'trɒnɪks, ˌel-/ n.pl. (usu. treated as sing.) 1 the branch of physics and technology concerned with the behaviour and movement of electrons in a vacuum, gas, semiconductor, etc. 2 the circuits used in this.

electron microscope n. a type of microscope employing a beam of electrons rather than light. First developed in the early 1930s, the electron microscope employs magnetic or electrostatic fields to focus the beam. Because the de Broglie wavelength of a high-speed electron is very much shorter than that of light, a correspondingly greater resolving power is possible, so that magnifications of up to one million times can be achieved. In one type of instrument the electron beam is focused on to a very thin specimen and the transmitted electrons create an image on a fluorescent screen; other types use reflection from the specimen or a scanning beam. In all cases the image can be stored as a photograph. □ electron microscopy n.

electronvolt /ɪ'lektrɒnˌvəʊlt/ n. Physics a unit of energy (symbol: eV) equal to the work done on an electron in accelerating it through a potential difference of one volt. One electronvolt is equal to 1.602×10^{-19} joule.

electrophilic /ɪˌlektrəʊ'fɪlɪk/ adj. Chem. having an affinity for electrons. □ electrophile /ɪ'lektrəʊˌfaɪl/ n.

electrophoresis /ɪˌlektrəʊfɔː'riːsɪs/ n. Physics & Chem. the movement of charged particles in a fluid under the influence of an electric field. □ electrophoretic /-fə'retɪk/ adj. [ELECTRO- + Gk phorēsis being carried] electrophorus /ˌɪlek'trɒfərəs, ˌel-/ n. a device for repeatedly generating static electricity by induction. [mod.L f. ELECTRO- + Gk -phoros bearing] electrophysiology /ɪˌlektrəʊˌfɪzɪ'ɒlədʒɪ/ n. the branch of physiology that deals with the electrical phenomena associated with nervous and other bodily activity. □ electrophysiological /-zɪə'lɒdʒɪk(ə)l/ adj.

electroplate /ɪ'lektrəˌpleɪt/ v. & n. ● v.tr. coat (a utensil etc.) by electrolytic deposition with chromium, silver, etc. ● n. electroplated articles. □ electroplater n.

electroplexy /ɪ'lektrəˌpleksɪ/ n. Brit. electroconvulsive therapy. [ELECTRO- + APOPLEXY] electroporation /ɪˌlektrəʊpə'reɪʃ(ə)n/ n. Biol. the action or process of introducing DNA or chromosomes into the cells of bacteria etc., using a pulse of electricity to open the pores in the cell membrane briefly. [ELECTRO- + PORE^{1} + -ATION] electropositive /ɪˌlektrəʊ'pɒzɪtɪv/ adj. 1 electrically positive. 2 Chem. (of an element) tending to lose electrons in chemical reactions.

electroscope /ɪ'lektrə,skəʊp/ n. an instrument for detecting and measuring electricity, esp. as an indication of the ionization of air by radioactivity. □ electroscopic /ɪ,lektrə'skopɪk/ adj.

electro-shock /ɪ'lektrəʊ,ʃok/ attrib.adj. (of medical treatment) by means of electric shocks; electroconvulsive.

electrostatic /ɪ,lektrəʊ'stætɪk/ adj. of stationary electric charges or electrostatics. □ electrostatic units a system of units based primarily on the forces between electric charges. [ELECTRO- + STATIC after hydrostatic] electrostatics /ɪ,lektrəʊ'stætɪks/ n.pl. (treated as sing.) the study of stationary electric charges or fields, as opposed to electric currents.

electrotechnology /ɪ,lektrəʊtek'nolədʒɪ/ n. the science of the application of electricity in technology. □ electrotechnic /-'teknɪk/ adj. electrotechnical adj. electrotechnics n.

electrotherapy /ɪ,lektrəʊ'θerəpɪ/ n. the treatment of diseases by the use of electricity. □ electrotherapist n. electrotherapeutic /-,θerə'pju:tɪk/ adj. electrotherapeutical adj.

electrothermal /ɪ,lektrəʊ'θɜ:m(ə)l/ adj. relating to heat electrically derived.

electrotype /ɪ'lektrəʊ,taɪp/ v. & n. ● v.tr. copy by the electrolytic deposition of copper on a mould, esp. for printing. ● n. a copy so formed. □ electrotyper n.

electrovalent /ɪ,lektrəʊ'veɪlənt/ adj. Chem. of bonding resulting from electrostatic attraction between ions. □ electrovalence n. electrovalency n.

electroweak /ɪ,lektrəʊ'wi:k/ adj. Physics relating to or denoting electromagnetic and weak interactions regarded as manifestations of the same interaction.

electrum /ɪ'lektrəm/ n. 1 an alloy of silver and gold used in ancient times. 2 native argentiferous gold ore. [ME f. L f. Gk ēlektron amber, electrum] electuary /ɪ'lektʃʊərɪ, -tjʊərɪ/ n. (pl. -ies) medicinal powder etc. mixed with honey or other sweet substance. [ME f. LL electuarium, prob. f. Gk ekleikton f. ekleikhō lick up] eleemosynary /,elɪi:'mosɪnərɪ, -'mɒzɪnərɪ/ adj. 1 of or dependent on alms. 2 charitable. 3 gratuitous. [med.L eleemosynarius f. LL eleemosyna: see ALMS] elegant /'elɪgənt/ adj. 1 graceful in appearance or manner. 2 tasteful, refined. 3 (of a mode of life etc.) of refined luxury. 4 ingeniously simple and pleasing. 5 US excellent. □ elegance n. elegantly adv. [F élégant or L elegant-, rel. to eligere: see ELECT] elegiac /,elɪ'dʒaɪək/ adj. & n. ● adj. 1 (of a metre) used for elegies. 2 mournful. ● n. (in pl.) verses in an elegiac metre. □ elegiac couplet a pair of lines consisting of a dactylic hexameter and a pentameter, esp. in Greek and Latin verse. □ elegiacally adv. [F élégiaque or f. LL elegiacus f. Gk elegeiakos: see ELEGY] elegize /'elɪ,dʒaɪz/ v. (also -ise) 1 intr. (often foll. by upon) write an elegy. 2 intr. write in a mournful strain. 3 tr. write an elegy upon. □ elegist n.

elegy /'elɪdʒɪ/ n. (in Greek and Roman poetry) a poem written in elegiac couplets, as notably by Catullus and Propertius. In modern literature an elegy is a poem of serious reflection, frequently a lament for the dead: examples include Milton's Lycidas, Shelley's Adonais, and Elegy Written in a Country Church-Yard by Thomas Gray. [F élégie or L elegia f. Gk elegeia f. elegos mournful poem] element /'elɪmənt/ n. 1 a component part or group; a contributing factor or thing. 2 Chem. & Physics a substance that cannot be resolved by chemical means into simpler substances. (See note below.) 3 a any of the four substances (earth, water, air, and fire) in ancient and medieval philosophy. b any of these as a being's natural abode or environment. c a person's appropriate or preferred sphere of operation. 4 a resistance wire that heats up in an electric heater, cooker, etc.; an electrode. 5 (in pl.) atmospheric agencies, esp. wind and storm. 6 (in pl.) the rudiments of learning or of a branch of knowledge. 7 (in pl.) the bread and wine of the Eucharist. 8 Math. & Logic an entity that is a single member of a set. □ in (or out of) one's element in (or out of) one's accustomed or preferred surroundings. reduced to its elements analysed. [ME f. OF f. L elementum]

▪ All stable matter consists of elements either individually or in combination. More than 100 elements are known although not all of them occur naturally, those heavier than uranium having been synthesized in nuclear reactions. The atoms of a given element all have the same atomic number, which represents the number of protons in the nucleus; the atomic number of each element is different. (See also ATOM, PERIODIC TABLE.)

elemental /,elɪ'ment(ə)l/ adj. & n. ● adj. 1 of the four elements. 2 of the powers of nature (elemental worship). 3 comparable to a force of nature (elemental grandeur; elemental tumult). 4 uncompounded (elemental oxygen). 5 essential. ● n. an entity or force thought to be physically manifested by occult means. □ elementalism n. (in senses 1, 2). [med.L elementalis (as ELEMENT)] elementary /,elɪ'mentərɪ/ adj. 1 a dealing with or arising from the simplest facts of a subject; rudimentary, introductory. b simple. 2 Chem. not decomposable. □ elementary particle Physics a subatomic particle, esp. one not known to be decomposable into simpler particles. elementary school a school in which elementary subjects are taught to young children. □ elementarily adv. elementariness n. [ME f. L elementarius (as ELEMENT)] elenchus /ɪ'leŋkəs/ n. (pl. elenchi /-kaɪ/) Logic logical refutation. □ Socratic elenchus an attempted refutation of an opponent's position by short question and answer. □ elenctic adj. [L f. Gk elegkhos] elephant /'elɪfənt/ n. (pl. same or elephants) 1 the largest living land animal, with a prehensile trunk and long curved ivory tusks. (See note below.) 2 a size of paper (711 x 584 mm). □ elephant-bird = AEPYORNIS. elephant grass a tall African grass, esp. Pennisetum purpureum. elephant seal a very large seal of the genus Mirounga, the male of which has an inflatable proboscis (also called sea elephant). elephant shrew a small insectivorous mammal of the order Macroscelidea, native to Africa, having a long snout and long hind limbs. □ elephantoid /,elɪ'fæntɔɪd/ adj. [ME olifaunt etc. f. OF oli-, elefant ult. f. L elephantus, elephans f. Gk elephas -antos ivory, elephant (ivory was known to the Greeks long before the elephant)]

▪ There are two species of elephant today, of which the African elephant, Loxodonta africana, is the larger (though a small variety exists). It has larger ears, a single-domed head, and two projections at the tip of the trunk. The Indian elephant, Elephas maximus, has smaller ears, a two-domed head, and a single-tipped trunk, and is used as a beast of burden in India and some countries of SE Asia. The tusks are actually modified upper incisors; the only other teeth are massive molars, of which only two pairs are in use at a time. Many elephant populations are threatened by the illegal ivory trade.

Elgar /ˈelgɑː(r)/, Sir Edward (William) (1857–1934), British composer. A self-taught musician from Worcester, he made his mark with the Enigma Variations (1899), a set of fourteen orchestral variations (on an undisclosed theme), thirteen of which are titled by the initials of his friends. He gained an international reputation with the oratorio The Dream of Gerontius (1900), the violin concerto (1910), and the cello concerto (1919). In Britain he is perhaps most famous for patriotic pieces such as the five Pomp and Circumstance marches (1901–30). In 1998 Elgar's Third Symphony, completed by the English composer Anthony Payne (b. 1936) from Elgar's sketches, was given its premiere.

Elgin /ˈelgɪn/, 8th Earl of (title of James Bruce) (1811–63), British colonial statesman. After serving as governor of Jamaica (1842–6), he became Governor-General of Canada (1847–54). Elgin Marbles a collection of ancient Greek marble sculptures and architectural fragments, chiefly from the frieze and pediment of the Parthenon in Athens, which the 7th Earl of Elgin (Thomas Bruce, 1766–1841) acquired from the occupying Turkish authorities in 1801–3 and sold to the British nation in 1816 for £35,000. The sculptures were executed by Phidias in the 5th century BC. Their original exhibition in London had an enormous impact, it being the first time authentic classical Greek sculpture had been on public display. They are currently housed in the British Museum, but are the subject of a repatriation request from the Greek government.

Elizabeth I /ɪˈlɪzəbəθ/ (1533–1603), daughter of Henry VIII, queen of England and Ireland 1558–1603. Succeeding her Catholic sister Mary I, Elizabeth re-established a moderate form of Protestantism as the religion of the state. None the less, her reign was dominated by the threat of a Catholic restoration (eventually leading to the execution of Mary, Queen of Scots) and by war with Spain, during which the country was saved from invasion by the defeat of the Armada in 1588. Her reign was characterized by a flowering of national culture, particularly in the field of literature, in which Shakespeare, Marlowe, and Spenser were all active. Although frequently courted, she never married.

El Niño /el 'niːnjəʊ/ n. (pl. El Niños) an irregularly occurring and complex series of climatic changes affecting the equatorial Pacific region. The name was originally applied to a warm ocean current which affected the waters off northern Peru and Ecuador annually, beginning usually in late December. Every few years, this warming is very marked, and the nutrient-poor warmer water has a disastrous effect on fisheries and the breeding success of seabirds. This warm current is now recognized to be one manifestation of a larger cycle of abnormal phenomena, sometimes lasting for more than a year, in which cause and effect have not been fully distinguished. The effects of El Niño, which may reach beyond the Pacific region, include reversal of wind patterns across the Pacific, drought in Australasia, and unseasonal heavy rain in South America. Empire State Building a skyscraper on Fifth Avenue, New York City, which was for several years the tallest building in the world. When first erected, in 1930–1, it measured 381 m (1,250 ft); the addition of a television mast in 1951 brought its height to 449 m (1,472 ft). It is named after New York, the Empire State.

Empire style n. a style of furniture, interior decoration, and dress which started in Paris around the time that Napoleon became emperor (1804) and spread through Continental Europe, corresponding to the Regency style in England. The style was neoclassical but marked by an interest in ancient (particularly Egyptian) motifs that was probably inspired by Napoleon's Egyptian campaigns. In women's dress there was a distinctive high-waisted fashion embellished with elaborate embroidery.

- The enclosure of common land, begun in England in the 12th century, marked the end of the traditional medieval system of open-field farming, in which land was divided into strips and managed by an individual only in the growing season, being available to the community for grazing animals during the rest of the year. Enclosure entailed splitting land into fields which were individually owned, thus curtailing common grazing rights. It made for more efficient farming but caused considerable hardship and unrest at various times, most notably in the mid-16th century, when the enclosure of much common land for sheep-farming resulted in widespread deprivation and hardship among the poor peasantry in large parts of England. The pressures of an expanding population, along with the advances made in the Agrarian Revolution, hastened the pace of enclosures during the 18th century, and by the early 19th century the available agricultural land had been almost completely enclosed.

encyclopedia /enˌsaɪklə'piːdɪə/ n. (also encyclopaedia) a book, often in several volumes, giving information on many subjects or on many aspects of one subject, usu. arranged alphabetically. The first true encyclopedias were by Roman writers such as Cato, Varro, and Pliny the Elder, with articles grouped under main topics. Medieval encyclopedias were generally in Latin, but after the Renaissance similar works were produced in vernacular languages and an alphabetical arrangement came to be adopted. The first book to be called an encyclopedia appeared in 1559. The 18th century saw the publication of the Cyclopaedia of Ephraim Chambers (1728) and the great French Encyclopédie (1751–76), under the direction of Diderot, whose contributors included Voltaire, Jean-Jacques Rousseau, and other brilliant but controversial writers. The Encyclopaedia Britannica began in Scotland in 1768–71 as a dictionary of the arts and sciences; its second edition, in ten volumes, added history and biography and the current (15th) edition is the largest encyclopedia in the English language. The Encyclopaedia Britannica has been based in Chicago since 1941. [mod.L f. spurious Gk egkuklopaideia for egkuklios paideia all-round education: cf. ENCYCLICAL]

▪ The modern scientific concept of energy was formulated in the 19th century mainly through the study of the generation of mechanical power by means of heat engines and electrical machines. Energy can be neither created nor destroyed, but only changed from one form into another. These forms include kinetic energy (energy of motion), potential energy (the energy an object has by virtue of its position), heat energy, electrical energy, and so on. Einstein (among others) showed that matter can also be regarded as a form of energy, as the two are interconvertible. The standard unit of energy is the joule.

England /ˈɪŋglənd/ a part of Great Britain and the United Kingdom, largely made up of the area south of the River Tweed, and containing the capital, London; pop. (1991) 46,170,300. There were settlements in England from at least palaeolithic times, and considerable remains exist of neolithic and Bronze Age cultures. These were followed by the arrival of the Celtic peoples, whose civilization spread over the whole country. The Romans under Julius Caesar raided the south of Britain in 55 and 54 BC, but full-scale invasion did not take place until a century later; the country was then administered as a Roman province until the withdrawal of the last Roman garrison in the early 5th century. In the 3rd–7th centuries Germanic-speaking tribes, traditionally known as Angles, Saxons, and Jutes, raided and then settled, establishing independent kingdoms. When the kingdom of Wessex became dominant in the 9th century England emerged as a distinct political entity, before being conquered by William, Duke of Normandy, in 1066. The neighbouring principality of Wales was gradually conquered during the Middle Ages and politically incorporated in the 16th century. During the period of Tudor rule (1485–1603) England emerged as a Protestant state with a strong stable monarchy and as a naval power. Scotland and England have been ruled by one monarch since 1603, and their two Parliaments were formally united in 1707. (See also GREAT BRITAIN.)

English /ˈɪŋglɪʃ/ adj. & n. ● adj. of or relating to England or its people or language. ● n. 1 the language of England; its literary or standard form. (See note below.) 2 (prec. by the; treated as pl.) the people of England. 3 US Billiards = SIDE n. 10. □ Queen's (or King's) English the English language as correctly written or spoken in Britain. □ Englishness n. [OE englisc, ænglisc (as ANGLE, -ISH^{1})]

▪ English is the principal language of Great Britain, the US, Ireland, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and many other countries. There are some 400 million native speakers, and it is the medium of communication for many millions more; it is the most widely used second language in the world. Its history can be divided into three stages: Old English (up to 1150), Middle English (1150–1500), and modern English (1500 onwards). Old English began with the settlement of Germanic-speaking tribes (Angles, Saxons, and Jutes) in Britain in the mid-5th century. It was an inflected language that slowly evolved a written literary form. Extension of vocabulary was brought by the spread of Christian culture, with some words adopted or translated from Latin, and by Scandinavian invaders in the 9th–10th centuries. After the Norman Conquest, Anglo-Norman was the language of the ruling classes, but from the 14th century English again became the standard, although over the Middle English period about half of its vocabulary was replaced by Norman French and Latin words. The modern English period has seen the language taken and used abroad, leading to new regional varieties such as American, West Indian, Indian, Australian, and Nigerian English, while the remarkable number of foreign words which were adopted in return have given English an incomparably large and international vocabulary. Despite the foreign influences, the Germanic nature of English has been maintained in its syntax and morphology, although most of its inflected endings had disappeared by the 15th century. While the pronunciation of English kept changing, the spelling (which was largely standardized by the publication of Dr Johnson's dictionary in 1755) in many cases remained unaltered, which explains why it is often at variance with pronunciation.

English Channel the sea channel separating southern England from northern France. It is 35 km (22 miles) wide at its narrowest point. A railway tunnel beneath it linking England and France was opened in 1994 (see CHANNEL TUNNEL).

English Civil War the war between Charles I and his Parliamentary opponents, 1642–9. Conflict between the parties had led the king to dissolve Parliament and rule alone 1629–40. Although he continued to levy taxes, he was forced to recall Parliament by the need for money to pursue war against the Scots; civil war broke out after Charles refused a series of demands made by the new Parliament. The king's forces (the Royalists, or Cavaliers) were dominated by nobles, Anglicans, and Catholics, while the Parliamentary forces (or Roundheads) contained many Puritans, Scottish Covenanters, merchants, and artisans. After several years of warfare, the better-organized Parliamentary forces under Oliver Cromwell gained the upper hand in 1644–5. Royalist resistance collapsed in 1646 and an attempt by Charles to regain power in alliance with the Scots was defeated at Preston in 1648, Charles himself being tried and executed by Parliament in 1649. Fought against a background of confused political and religious issues, the English Civil War dramatically changed the nature of English society and government, even though the period of republican government (the Commonwealth), at first under Cromwell, eventually ended with the restoration of Charles II (1660).

Enlightenment, the n. (also Age of Enlightenment) a European intellectual movement of the late 17th and 18th centuries, heavily influenced by the thinking of 17th-century philosophers and scientists such as Descartes, Locke, and Newton, and having at its core a belief in reason as the key to human knowledge and progress, a sense of religious tolerance, and a distrust of superstition. In Germany, it is associated with writers and philosophers such as Leibniz, Kant, Goethe, and Schiller. In France, Voltaire, Jean-Jacques Rousseau, and L'Encyclopédie (editors Diderot and d'Alembert) figure prominently, while in Britain, the movement is particularly represented in Scotland by the Encyclopaedia Britannica and by figures such as Adam Smith and David Hume. The ideas of the Enlightenment and its criticism of government and Church fuelled revolutionary thinking in France and the US and were influential on writers and politicians such as Jefferson and Paine.

- The concept of entropy first arose in the 19th century as a mathematical quantity in thermodynamics. It was later given a physical interpretation as representing the degree of disorder or randomness of the constituents of any physical system, expressed as the probability of occurrence of its particular arrangement of particles. Thermodynamic theory indicates that the entropy of an isolated system can increase but will never decrease. Considered as a closed system, therefore, the universe must always increase in entropy, the eventual consequence being a heat death — a state in which structure is absent and temperature is uniform.

- Since the Second World War concern for the human and natural environment has been growing. Interest in town planning and the conservation of buildings was followed by increasing awareness of the damage to wildlife, habitats, and planetary systems resulting from human activities. Pollution, deforestation, and the burning of fossil fuels were discovered to be leading to previously unsuspected phenomena such as global warming, acid rain, and ozone depletion. Campaigning groups such as Greenpeace and Friends of the Earth were set up, while Green political parties began to gain a voice, particularly in Europe. Environmentalists stress that the earth's resources are finite and that environmental damage cannot be halted without movement away from policies aimed at continual economic growth.

Gk epikos f. epos word, song]

▪ The early or primary epics, of which the most important Western examples are the Iliad and Odyssey of Homer, were derived from long-established, orally transmitted traditional tales and were probably intended to be recited in sections at feasts. Other primary epics include the Old English Beowulf, the Sumerian epic of Gilgamesh, the Indian Mahabharata, and the Germanic Nibelungenlied. Secondary epics such as Virgil's Aeneid and Milton's Paradise Lost were composed later as works of literature by single authors in imitation of the primary models. The epic form was highly valued in the Renaissance, and was employed by Italians such as Ariosto (Orlando Furioso); in modern times the term has been used of ambitious, large-scale books and films such as Tolstoy's War and Peace and D. W. Griffith's Birth of a Nation.

Erasmus /ɪˈræzməs/, Desiderius (Dutch name Gerhard Gerhards) (*c.*1469–1536), Dutch humanist and scholar. During his lifetime he was the most famous scholar in Europe and the first there to achieve renown through the printed word. He published his own Greek edition of the New Testament (1516), followed by a Latin translation, and paved the way for the Reformation with his satires on the Church, including the Colloquia Familiaria (1518). However, his abhorrence of violence prevented him from joining the Protestants and he condemned Luther in De Libero Arbitrio (1523).

Erastianism /ɪˈræstɪəˌnɪz(ə)m/ n. the doctrine that the state should have supremacy over the Church in ecclesiastical matters (wrongly attributed to Erastus). The ascendancy of the secular power was defended by the Anglican churchman Richard Hooker in his Ecclesiastical Polity (1594), and the principle remains in a modified form in Britain, where Parliament, though its members may profess any or no religion, retains the right to legislate on religious matters concerning the established Church. □ Erastian n. & adj.

Erastus /ɪˈræstəs/ (Swiss name Thomas Lieber; also called Liebler or Lüber) (1524–83), Swiss theologian and physician. He was professor of medicine at Heidelberg University from 1558. A follower of Zwingli, he opposed the imposition of a Calvinistic system of church government in Heidelberg because of the Calvinists' excessive use of excommunication. The doctrine of Erastianism was later attributed to him, although his views were less extreme.

(See note below.) 2 the languages of this people. ● adj. of or relating to the Eskimos or their languages. ¶ In Canada and, increasingly, elsewhere the term Inuit is used to refer to Canadian Eskimos and also to Eskimos generally. The term Eskimo is regarded as offensive by some people. [Danish f. F Esquimaux (pl.) f. Algonquian, lit. 'eaters of raw flesh']

- Originally a semi-nomadic hunting-and-gathering people, Eskimos are noted for their adaptation to a harsh environment and for the self-sufficiency of the family units (although during the winter months families gather in groups which disperse in summer). They are associated with the igloo or ice shelter, although this is not as common traditionally as huts made of turf or driftwood. Their way of life has changed considerably in recent years, and many now live in permanent settlements. The Eskimo languages, which are polysynthetic and ergative, belong to the Eskimo-Aleut family and are divided into two main branches: the Inupiaq or Inuit (spoken in Greenland, Labrador, the Arctic coast of Canada, and northern Alaska) and the Yupik (spoken in southern Alaska and Siberia). There are approximately 40,000 speakers in Greenland, 7,000 in Denmark, 25,000 in Alaska, 18,000 in Canada, and several hundred in Siberia.

- There has long been debate as to whether moral action can be justified or demonstrated to be rational; discussion has also centred on whether such a thing as objective moral truth exists. Schools of ethics in Western philosophy can be divided, very roughly, into three sorts. The first, drawing on the work of Aristotle, holds that the virtues (such as justice, charity, and generosity) are dispositions to act in ways that benefit both the person possessing them and that person's society. The second, defended particularly by Kant, makes the concept of duty central to morality: humans are bound, from a knowledge of their duty as rational beings, to obey the categorical imperative to respect other rational beings. Thirdly, utilitarianism asserts that the guiding principle of conduct should be the greatest happiness or benefit of the greatest number.

Ethiopia /ˌiːθɪˈəʊpɪə/ a country in NE Africa, on the Red Sea; pop. (est. 1993) 45,892,000; languages, Amharic (official), several other Afro-Asiatic languages; capital, Addis Ababa. Formerly known as Abyssinia, Ethiopia is the oldest independent country in Africa. Its earliest recorded civilization, known to the ancient Egyptians as Punt, dates from the 2nd millennium BC. Christianized in the 4th century, Ethiopia was isolated by Muslim conquests to the north three centuries later, remaining little known to Europeans until the late 19th century. It successfully resisted Italian attempts at colonization in the 1890s but was invaded and conquered by Italy in 1935. The emperor Haile Selassie was restored by the British in 1941 and ruled until overthrown in a Marxist coup in 1974. The subsequent period was marked by civil war, fighting against separatist guerrillas in Eritrea (now a separate country) and Tigray, and by repeated famines due to drought; after the fall of the military government in 1991 a multi-party system was adopted.

Euler[1] /'ɔɪlə(r)/, Leonhard (1707–83), Swiss mathematician. Euler, who worked mainly in St Petersburg and Berlin, was a prolific and original contributor to all branches of mathematics. His attempts to elucidate the nature of functions and his successful (though logically dubious) study of infinite series led his successors, notably Abel and Cauchy, to introduce ideas of convergence and rigorous argument into mathematics. One of his best-known theorems defines a connection between two of the most important constants in mathematics, expressed in the equation $e^{i\pi} = -1$.

Euler[2] /'ɔɪlə(r)/, Ulf Svante von (1905–83), Swedish physiologist, the son of Hans Euler-Chelpin. He was the first to discover a prostaglandin, which he isolated from semen. He then searched for the principal chemical neurotransmitter of the sympathetic nervous system, and identified it as noradrenalin. Euler was awarded a Nobel Prize for this in 1970.

Euler-Chelpin /ˌɔɪlə'kelpɪn/, Hans Karl August Simon von (1873–1964), German-born Swedish biochemist. He worked mainly on enzymes and vitamins, and explained the role of enzymes in the alcoholic fermentation of sugar. He shared the Nobel Prize for chemistry in 1929.

Europe /ˈjʊərəp/ 1 a continent of the northern hemisphere. (See note below.) 2 Continental Europe, Europe excluding Britain. 3 colloq. the European Community.

- Europe consists of the western part of the land mass of which Asia forms the eastern (and greater) part, and includes Scandinavia and the British Isles. It contains approximately 20 per cent of the world's population. The western part of Europe was consolidated within the Roman Empire, but the subsequent barbarian invasions brought political chaos. European history has remained turbulent, with only relatively short periods of stability, some countries gaining local dominance for a time while others were seeking to establish their existence. Politically and economically pre-eminent in the 18th and 19th centuries, Europe was to an extent overshadowed in the 20th century, especially by the rise of the superpowers and latterly of Japan. After the Second World War, Europe was divided between the non-Communist nations of western Europe (which generally sought closer association with each other) and the Soviet-dominated Eastern bloc. With the collapse of Communism in the late 1980s, a new era of change began with many states in eastern Europe seeking to establish or re-establish their independence.

Europe, Council of an association of European states, independent of the European Community, founded in 1949 to safeguard the political and cultural heritage of Europe and promote economic and social cooperation. Most of its conclusions take the form of international agreements (known as European Conventions) or recommendations to governments. One of the Council's principal achievements is the European Convention on Human Rights.

European Atomic Energy Community (abbr. Euratom) an institution established in 1957 by members of the European Coal and Steel Community (ECSC) to create within a short period the technical and industrial conditions needed to exploit nuclear discoveries and especially to produce nuclear energy on a large scale. It is one of the communities (with the ECSC and EEC) that forms the European Community.

European Bank for Reconstruction and Development a bank established in London in Apr. 1991 with the aim of assisting formerly state-controlled economies in what were the Communist countries of eastern Europe, and in the Soviet Union, to make the transition to free-market economies.

European Coal and Steel Community (abbr. ECSC) an organization established in 1952 to regulate pricing, transport, tariffs, etc., for the coal and steel industries of the member countries, which were originally France, West Germany, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands, and Luxembourg. It was the first of the communities which now make up the European Community (the others are Euratom and the EEC).

European Commission a group, appointed by agreement among the governments of the European Community since 1987, which acts as the initiator of Community action and the guardian of its treaties. Its members are pledged to independence of their governments and of national or other particular interests. The commission meets in Brussels.

European Commission for Human Rights an institution of the Council of Europe, set up under the European Convention on Human Rights to examine complaints of alleged breaches of the Convention. It is based in Strasbourg. (See also EUROPEAN COURT OF HUMAN RIGHTS.)

European Community (abbr. EC) an organization of western European countries, committed to European economic and political integration as envisaged by the Treaty of Rome. A single market within the EC came into force on 1 Jan. 1993, under the terms of the Single European Act (1987). Monetary union is projected, but is still a distant goal; the European currency unit (see ECU) is used only for a restricted class of international transactions. The EC came into being in 1967 through the merger of the European Economic Community, Euratom, and the European Coal and Steel Community, although the combined organization was (until 1987) commonly known as the European Economic Community. It comprises also the European Commission, the European Parliament, and the European Court of Justice. Its original membership of six — Belgium, France, West Germany, Italy, Luxembourg, and the Netherlands — was augmented by Denmark, Ireland, and the UK in 1973, Greece in 1981, and Spain and Portugal in 1986; in 1994 the European Parliament approved the admission of Austria, Finland, and Sweden (Norway voted to withdraw). On 1 Nov. 1993, with the coming into force of the Maastricht Treaty, the European Community was encompassed by the newly created European Union (EU), which comprises the EC together with two intergovernmental 'pillars' for dealing with foreign affairs and with immigration and justice.

European Convention on Human Rights an international agreement set up by the Council of Europe in 1950 to protect human rights. Under the convention were established the European Commission for Human Rights and the European Court of Human Rights.

European Council a grouping of the heads of government of the European Community countries, inaugurated in 1975, which meets two or three times a year to discuss EC business.

European Court of Human Rights an institution of the Council of Europe, set up by the European Convention on Human Rights to protect human rights in conjunction with the European Commission for Human Rights. The court, based in Strasbourg, is called to give judgement in cases where the commission has failed to secure a settlement.

European Court of Justice an institution of the European Community, with thirteen judges appointed by its member governments, meeting in Luxembourg. It was established in 1958, and exists to safeguard the law in the interpretation and application of Community treaties and to determine violations of these. Cases may be brought to it by member states, Community institutions, firms, or individuals.

European currency unit see ECU.

European Economic Community (abbr. EEC) an institution of the European Community, an economic association of western European countries set up by the Treaty of Rome (1957). Its aims include the free movement of labour and capital between member countries, especially by the abolition of customs barriers and cartels, and the fostering of common agricultural and trading policies. Until 1987 the term was generally used also to signify the European Community. (See also EUROPEAN COMMUNITY.)

European Free Trade Association (abbr. EFTA) a customs union of western European countries, established in 1960 as a trade grouping without the political implications of the European Community. The original members were Austria, Denmark, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, Switzerland, and the UK, although Denmark, Portugal, and the UK have since left to join the EC. All tariffs between EFTA and EEC countries had been abolished by 1984.

European Investment Bank a bank set up in 1958 by the Treaty of Rome to finance capital investment projects promoting the balanced development of members of the European Community. It is based in Luxembourg.

European Monetary System (abbr. EMS) a monetary system inaugurated by the European Community in 1979 to coordinate and stabilize the exchange rates of the currencies of member countries, as a prelude to monetary union. It is based on the use of the Exchange Rate Mechanism.

European Monetary Union (abbr. EMU) a European Community programme intended to work towards full economic unity in Europe based on the phased introduction of a common currency (the euro). The programme was announced in 1989; the second stage came into effect on 1 January 1994 under the terms of the Maastricht Treaty, and in 2002 the euro replaced the currencies of twelve EU countries (see EURO.)

European Parliament the Parliament of the European Community, originally established in 1952. From 1958 to 1979 it was composed of representatives drawn from the Parliaments of member countries, but since 1979 direct elections have taken place every five years. Through the Single European Act (1987) it assumed a degree of sovereignty over national Parliaments. The European Parliament meets (about twelve times a year) in Strasbourg, and its committee is in Brussels.

European Recovery Program see MARSHALL PLAN.

European Space Agency (abbr. ESA) an organization set up in 1975 and based in Paris, formed from two earlier organizations (the European Space Research Organization and the European Launcher Development Organization). Its aims are to advance space research and technology, especially by the design, development, and deployment of satellites, and to coordinate the national space programmes of the collaborating countries.

European Union (abbr. EU) see EUROPEAN COMMUNITY.

▪ The philosophical speculation that primitive organisms may change into more complex forms and ascend some imaginary hierarchical ladder is an idea that may be traced back to the ancient Greeks. Jean Baptiste de Lamarck was one of the first to propose a theory of organic evolution, against the prevailing belief in special creation: his suggestion, not now accepted, was that species transform by the inheritance of acquired characteristics. Sir Charles Lyell's demonstration that geological deposits are the product of slow small changes over long periods of time allowed Darwin to develop a theory of evolution by gradual natural selection. In On the Origin of Species (1859) he proposed that an isolated variety within a population might give rise to a new species by survival of the form best suited to its new surroundings; this is what the term 'survival of the fittest' means. Most modern explanations of evolution are essentially modifications of Darwin's theory. Combined with recent genetical theory, and the new understanding of the role of DNA, evolution is the great unifying concept in modern biology. (See also SOCIOBIOLOGY.)

exchange control n. governmental restriction on the movement of currency between countries. Exchange controls are chiefly used by developing countries, but have also been used from time to time by Western nations. Restrictions on the export of currency from the UK were lifted in 1979.

Exchange Rate Mechanism (abbr. ERM) in the European Community, a system for allowing the value of participating currencies to fluctuate to a defined degree in relation to each other so as to control exchange rates within the European Monetary System. The currency of each participating country is given a rate of exchange with the ecu, from which it is allowed to fluctuate by no more than a specified amount; if a currency moves outside its allotted range the government must alter its economic policies or reset the currency's rate with the ecu. Britain joined the ERM in 1990, but withdrew in 1992, as did Italy. In mid-1993 the ERM experienced a near-collapse when the Bundesbank decided not to lower its main interest rate and the French and Belgian francs and Danish krone came under pressure from currency dealers and had difficulty in remaining within their allotted ranges. As a result, it was agreed to allow most currencies (apart from those of Germany and the Netherlands) to fluctuate within a far broader band than before.

▪ The Normans in England created two departments dealing with finance: one was the Treasury, which received and paid out money on behalf of the monarch, and the other was the Exchequer, which was itself divided into two parts, lower and upper. The lower Exchequer was an office for receiving money and was connected to the Treasury; the upper Exchequer was a court of law dealing with cases related to revenue, and was merged with the High Court of Justice in 1880. The Exchequer now denotes the account at the Bank of England into which tax receipts and other public monies are paid, the balance of which forms the Consolidated Fund. Its name survives also in the title Chancellor of the Exchequer.

expressionism /ɪk'spreʃəˌnɪz(ə)m/ n. a broad term used in art, literature, music, etc. to describe a general artistic approach characterized by a rejection of traditional ideas of beauty or harmony and by the use of distortion, exaggeration, and other non-naturalistic devices in order to emphasize and express the inner world of emotion rather than any external reality. The paintings of El Greco and Grünewald exemplify expressionism in this broad sense, but the term is also used of a late 19th and 20th-century European and specifically German movement tracing its origins to Van Gogh, Edvard Munch, and James Ensor, which insisted on the primacy of the artist's feelings and mood, often incorporating violence and the grotesque. Major expressionist painters include Chaim Soutine and Georges Rouault in France and Oskar Kokoschka (1886–1980) in Austria, while in the theatre the term has been associated with Strindberg, and with German dramatists such as Frank Wedekind and early Brecht. In cinema, films identified with expressionism include Nosferatu (1922) by F. W. Murnau (1888–1931) and Fritz Lang's Metropolis (1927). □ expressionist n. & adj. expressionistic /-ˌspreʃə'nɪstɪk/ adj. expressionistically adv.

▪ The idea that it was possible for a species to become extinct came to be accepted gradually in the mid-19th century. Fossils were at first seen as being victims of the biblical flood, until Darwin and others demonstrated the vast expanse of geological time and the likelihood of biological evolution. The dodo and Steller's sea cow, exterminated in the 17th–18th centuries, were probably the first examples of extinction to be recognized, and it came to be realized that the dinosaurs must have become extinct in the much more remote past. It is now known that there have been several major mass extinctions in the history of the earth, perhaps arising from catastrophic events that affected the climate, thereby making way for the dramatic diversification of new species.

▪ In the most primitive animals, from protozoa to flatworms, the eye or eyes consist merely of a few light-sensitive cells on the skin surface. Many other invertebrates have ocelli with a simple lens, while the compound eyes of insects consist of numerous tiny facets that together form a crude mosaic image. Cephalopod molluscs have evolved a complex eye that is remarkably similar to that of vertebrates. The basic components of the vertebrate eye are a transparent cornea, an adjustable iris, a lens for focusing, and a sensitive retina lining the back of the eye. The retina contains varying proportions of two light-sensitive cells – rods for detecting black and white images, and cones for coloured light. Primates and predatory birds and mammals have forward-facing eyes that provide overlapping images and good binocular vision.

Falkland Islands /ˈfɔːklənd, ˈfolk-/ (also Falklands) a group of islands in the South Atlantic, forming a British Crown Colony; pop. (1991) 2,121; capital, Stanley (on East Falkland). The group consists of two main islands and over a hundred smaller ones, about 500 km (300 miles) east of the Strait of Magellan. First visited by European explorers in the late 16th century, the Falklands were successively controlled by the French and Spanish before being occupied and colonized by Britain in 1832–3, following the expulsion of an Argentinian garrison. Argentina has refused to recognize British sovereignty and has continued to refer to the islands by their old Spanish name — the Malvinas. In 1982 an Argentinian invasion led to a short conflict (see Falklands War), which ended in a successful British reoccupation.

Falkland Islands Dependencies an overseas territory of the UK in the South Atlantic, consisting of the South Sandwich Islands and South Georgia. The territory is administered from the Falkland Islands.

Falklands War an armed conflict between Britain and Argentina in 1982. On the orders of General Galtieri's military junta, Argentinian forces invaded the Falkland Islands in support of their claim to sovereignty. In response Britain sent a task force of ships and aircraft across 13,000 km (8,000 miles), which forced the Argentinians to surrender six weeks after its arrival.

faradaic /ˌfærə'deɪɪk/ adj. (also faradic /fə'rædɪk/) Electr. inductive, induced. [FARADAY]

Faraday /'færəˌdeɪ/, Michael (1791–1867), English physicist and chemist. One of the greatest experimentalists, Faraday was largely self-educated. Appointed by Sir Humphry Davy as his assistant at the Royal Institution, he initially concentrated on analytical chemistry, and discovered benzene in 1825. His most important work was in electromagnetism, in which field he demonstrated electromagnetic rotation and discovered electromagnetic induction (the key to the development of the electric dynamo and motor). Faraday's concept of magnetic lines of force formed the basis of the classical field theory of electromagnetic behaviour. He also discovered the laws of electrolysis.

▪ Fascism reached its peak of influence in Europe between 1930 and 1945, notably in Italy, Spain, and perhaps most importantly in Germany, where it underpinned the ideology of the Nazi Party. Although there is no coherent body of political doctrine associated with Fascism, it tends to include a belief in the supremacy of one national or ethnic group over others, a contempt for democracy, an insistence on obedience to a powerful and absolute leader, and a strong demagogic approach. After 1945 the influence of Fascism declined, although it survived in Spain (till 1975) and Portugal (till 1974) and in the style of some governments of South America; in the 1990s, however, Fascism underwent a resurgence, with neo-Fascist groups achieving electoral successes in France, Russia, and Italy.

Father Christmas an imaginary person said to bring presents for children on Christmas Eve. Traditionally he arrives from the far north, but his origin is obscure and his conventionalized appearance as a jolly old man with a long white beard and red cloak trimmed with white fur is comparatively recent. In late medieval Europe he became identified with St Nicholas (Santa Claus). In England Father Christmas was a personification of Christmas, a genial red-robed old man who appeared in many 16th-century masques and in mummers' plays. In the 19th century there was a great revival of the celebration of Christmas, and Father Christmas acquired (from St Nicholas) the association of present-bringing.

- Feminism is a broad term which does not refer to a single unified movement and is used to cover a great variety of political and social campaigns and ideas. The issue of rights for women became prominent during the French and American revolutions in the late 18th century; Mary Wollstonecraft's A Vindication of the Rights of Woman was published in 1792. In Britain, however, it was not until the emergence of the suffragette movement in the late 19th century that there was significant political change, women finally gaining the vote in 1918 (see SUFFRAGETTE). The 'second wave' of feminism that arose during the 1960s in Europe and North America formed part of the widespread social changes and political protests of that era; in general, the idea of unity or 'sisterhood' was considered more important than issues (such as ethnicity and class) which could divide women. Seminal figures included Simone de Beauvoir, Betty Friedan, and Germaine Greer. During the 1970s and 1980s the movement became more fragmented and critical of the ideals of unity expressed in the 1960s: a division arose between mainstream or socialist feminists, interested in working to improve the position of women in society as it is, and radical feminists, who felt that any interaction with men tended to result in exploitation or violence. In recent years intellectual feminism, associated with psychoanalysis and deconstruction, has come to prominence, particularly in France; there has also been something of a backlash against feminism and the hailing by some of a post-feminist age.

fencing /'fensɪŋ/ n. 1 a set or extent of fences. 2 material for making fences. 3 the activity or sport of fighting with foils or other kinds of sword. (See note below.)

- Skilful use of a sword according to established rules and movements was practised by the ancient Egyptians, Persians, Greeks, and Romans, not only in war but also as a pastime. The modern style of fencing, with its emphasis on skill and speed and its use of a light slender sword, arose in 16th-century Italy, although the organized sport did not begin until the late 19th century. Fencers wear protective jackets and masks, and score points by registering hits with the sword (a foil, sabre, or épée); the officials judging competitions are now assisted by electronic registering of hits.

Ferdinand /'fɜːdɪnənd/ of Aragon (known as Ferdinand the Catholic) (1452–1516), king of Castile 1474–1516 and of Aragon 1479–1516. His marriage to Isabella of Castile in 1469 ensured his accession (as Ferdinand V) to the throne of Castile with her. During this time, they instituted the Spanish Inquisition (1478). Ferdinand subsequently succeeded to the throne of Aragon (as Ferdinand II) and was joined as monarch by Isabella. Together, they supported Columbus's expedition in 1492. Their capture of Granada from the Moors in the same year effectively united Spain as one country. Their daughter Catherine of Aragon became the first wife of Henry VIII of England. (See also ISABELLA I.)

Ferm. abbr. Fermanagh.

Fermanagh /fə'mænə/ one of the Six Counties of Northern Ireland, formerly an administrative area; chief town, Enniskillen.

Fermat /'fɜːmɑː/, Pierre de (1601–65), French lawyer and mathematician. His study of the problems of finding tangents to curves, finding areas under curves, and maxima and minima, led directly to the general methods of calculus introduced by Newton and Leibniz. Fermat made many discoveries about integers, for which he is seen as the founder of the theory of numbers.

fermata /fə'mɑːtə/ n. (pl. fermatas) Mus. 1 an unspecified prolongation of a note or rest. 2 a sign indicating this. [It.]

Fermat's last theorem n. (also Fermat's theorem) the conjecture by Fermat that if n is greater than 2 then there is no integer whose *n*th power can be expressed as the sum of two smaller *n*th powers. The conjecture (of which Fermat noted that he had 'a truly wonderful proof') has been demonstrated by calculation to be true for very many possible values of n, and in 1995 a general proof was announced by the Princeton-based British mathematician Andrew Wiles.

ferment n. & v. ● n. /'fɜːment/ 1 agitation, excitement, tumult. 2 a fermenting, fermentation. b a fermenting-agent or leaven. ● v. /fə'ment/ 1 intr. & tr. undergo or subject to fermentation. 2 intr. & tr. effervesce or cause to effervesce. 3 tr. excite; stir up; foment. □ fermentable /fə'mentəb(ə)l/ adj. fermenter n. [ME f. fermentation /ˌfɜːmen'teɪʃ(ə)n/ n. 1 the breakdown of a substance by micro-organisms, such as yeasts and bacteria, usu. in the absence of oxygen, esp. of sugar to ethyl alcohol in making beers, wines, and spirits. 2 agitation, excitement. □ fermentative /fə'mentətɪv/ adj. [ME f. LL fermentatio (as FERMENT)]

Fermi /'fɜːmɪ/, Enrico (1901–54), Italian-born American atomic physicist. Working at first in Italy, he invented (with Paul Dirac) Fermi–Dirac statistics, a mathematical tool of great value in atomic, nuclear, and solid-state physics. He predicted the existence of the neutrino, and produced radioactive isotopes by bombarding atomic nuclei with neutrons. He was awarded the Nobel Prize for physics in 1938. Moving to the US, Fermi directed the first controlled nuclear chain reaction in 1942, and joined the Manhattan Project to work on the atom bomb. The artificial element fermium and a class of subatomic particles, the fermions, are named after him.

fermi /'fɜːmɪ/ n. (pl. fermis) a unit of length equal to 10^{-15} metre, formerly used in nuclear physics. [FERMI] fermion /'fɜːmɪˌɒn/ n. Physics a subatomic particle, such as a nucleon, which has half-integral spin and follows the statistical description given by Fermi and Dirac (cf. BOSON). [FERMI] fermium /'fɜːmɪəm/ n. an artificial radioactive metallic chemical element (atomic number 100; symbol Fm). A member of the actinide series, fermium was discovered in 1953 in the debris of the first hydrogen bomb explosion. [FERMI] fern /fɜːn/ n. (pl. same or ferns) a flowerless pteridophyte plant of the order Filicopsida, reproducing by spores and usu. having feathery fronds. □ fernery n. (pl. -ies). ferny adj. [OE fearn f. WG]

Fernando Póo /fəˌnændəʊ 'pəʊ/ the former name (until 1973) for BIOKO.

ferocious /fə'rəʊʃəs/ adj. 1 fierce, savage; wildly cruel. 2 esp. US colloq. (as an intensifier) very great, extreme. □ ferociously adv. ferociousness n. [L ferox -ocis]

Ferranti /fə'ræntɪ/, Sebastian Ziani de (1864–1930), English electrical engineer. He was one of the pioneers of electricity generation and distribution in Britain, his chief contribution being the use of high voltages for economical transmission over a distance.

Ferrara /fə'rɑːrə/ a city in northern Italy, capital of a province of the same name; pop. (1990) 140,600. Ferrara grew to prominence in the 13th century under the rule of the powerful Este family.

Ferrari /fə'rɑːrɪ/, Enzo (1898–1988), Italian car designer and manufacturer. He became a racing driver for Alfa Romeo in 1920 and proceeded to work as one of their designers. In 1929 he founded the company named after him, launching the famous Ferrari marque in 1947 and producing a range of high-quality sports and racing cars. Since the early 1950s Ferraris have won the greatest number of world championship Grands Prix of any car.

ferrate /'fereɪt/ n. Chem. a salt of (the hypothetical) ferric acid. [L ferrum iron]

feudal system n. a medieval European politico-economic system of land-holding which was based on a reciprocal arrangement between vassal, peasant, and lord. The nobility held lands from the Crown in exchange for a specified amount of military service; the knights or vassals were the tenants of the nobles; and the unfree peasantry (villeins or serfs) lived on their lord's land, gave him homage, and had to provide him with labour or a share of their produce, notionally in exchange for military protection. Having been introduced into England by William I, the feudal system began to break down there in the 13th and 14th centuries, although feudal tenures were not actually abolished by statute until 1666; the related system of serfdom survived in some countries for much longer (see SERF). In Scotland land is still technically held under a feudal tenure from the Crown.

Feydeau /'feɪdəʊ/, Georges (1862–1921), French dramatist. His name has become a byword for French bedroom farce. He wrote some forty plays, including Hotel Paradiso (1894) and Le Dindon (1896).

Feynman /'feɪnmən/, Richard Phillips (1918–88), American theoretical physicist. He worked in quantum electrodynamics, and introduced important new techniques for studying the electromagnetic interactions between subatomic particles. This approach is expressed in diagrams that describe the exchange of particles (see FEYNMAN DIAGRAM). He shared the Nobel Prize for physics in 1965.

Feynman diagram n. Physics a diagram of interactions between subatomic particles. [FEYNMAN]

Fez /fez/ (also Fès) a city in northern Morocco, founded in 808; pop. (1982) 448,800.

fibreboard /'faɪbəˌbɔ:d/ n. (US fiberboard) a building material made of wood or other plant fibres compressed into boards.

fibreglass /'faɪbəˌglɑ:s/ n. (US fiberglass) glass in fibrous form; material made from or containing this. Plastic reinforced by glass fibres is a strong lightweight structural material used e.g. for boat-hulls; matted fibreglass is used mainly as a thermal insulation material. Fibreglass was developed commercially in the US in the 1930s.

fibre optics n. the use of thin flexible fibres of glass or other transparent solids to transmit light-signals. Fibre optics was developed and named by Dr Narinder Singh Kapany in the mid-1950s. The fibres used are less than 1 mm in thickness and have a high refractive index. Applications include the internal inspection of the body (endoscopy) and communications. An optical communications system consists of a transmitter, a length of fibre, and a receiver. The transmitter converts an electrical signal into light by modulating the output of a semiconductor laser or light-emitting diode. The modulated light passes into the fibre and propagates through it by a series of total internal reflections at the fibre walls; the receiver detects the optical signal and reconstructs the original electrical signal. Because of the high frequencies employed, one fibre can carry nearly 2,000 channels simultaneously.

fibril /'faɪbrɪl/ n. 1 a small fibre. 2 a subdivision of a fibre. □ fibrillar adj. fibrillary adj. [mod.L fibrilla dimin. of L fibra fibre]

▪ The means by which a magnet attracts a piece of iron or another magnet some distance away, even when wood or stone is interposed, has perplexed scientists from antiquity and is still poorly understood. The explanation most widely accepted today, originally proposed by Faraday, holds that a magnet produces an intermediate condition in space, called a magnetic field, which in turn acts directly on other magnets placed in the field; this condition can exist even in the absence of any material medium and is not directly affected by the presence of any such medium. Electric fields are similarly introduced to explain the action of one stationary electric charge on another. It is now known that the magnetism of an object is due to tiny circulating electric currents, and that electric charges in motion are responsible for all magnetic fields. When electric charges accelerate, a third type of field is produced, the electromagnetic radiation field. In summary: stationary electric charges produce electric fields, steadily moving charges produce in addition a magnetic field, and accelerating charges produce electromagnetic radiation.

fielder /ˈfiːldə(r)/ n. Cricket etc. a member (other than the bowler) of the side that is fielding.

Fielding /ˈfiːldɪŋ/, Henry (1707–54), English novelist. After writing several comedies and farces, he provoked the introduction of censorship with his sharp political satire The Historical Register for 1736; the resultant Licensing Act of 1737 effectively ended his career as a dramatist. He turned to writing picaresque novels, including Joseph Andrews (1742) — which begins as a parody of Samuel Richardson's Pamela — and Tom Jones (1749). Fielding became Justice of the Peace for Westminster in 1748, and was responsible for the formation of the Bow Street Runners the following year.

Field Marshal n. an officer of the highest rank in the British and some other armies.

Field of the Cloth of Gold the scene of a meeting between Henry VIII of England and Francis I of France near Calais in 1520, for which both monarchs erected elaborate temporary palaces and pavilions, including a sumptuous display of golden cloth. Little of importance was achieved, although the meeting functioned as a symbol of Henry's determination to play a full part in European dynastic politics.

Fields^1 /fiːldz/, Dame Gracie (born Grace Stansfield) (1898–1979), English singer and comedienne. During the 1930s she enjoyed great success with English music-hall audiences. She went on to star in a series of popular films, including Sing as We Go (1934).

Fields^2 /fiːldz/, W. C. (born William Claude Dukenfield) (1880–1946), American comedian. Having made his name as a comedy juggler he became a vaudeville star, appearing in the Ziegfeld Follies revues between 1915 and 1921. His films established him as an internationally famous comic; they include The Bank Dick (1940).

Finland /ˈfɪnlənd/ (called in Finnish Suomi) a country on the Baltic Sea, between Sweden and Russia; pop. (1990) 4,998,500; official languages, Finnish and Swedish; capital, Helsinki. Finland is mainly a lowland country, with extensive forests and many lakes; the northern third of the country lies within the Arctic Circle. Converted to Christianity by Eric IX of Sweden in the 12th century, Finland became an area of Swedish–Russian rivalry. A Grand Duchy from the 16th century, it was ceded to Russia in 1809, becoming an independent republic after the Russian Revolution. Wars with the USSR in 1939–40 and 1941–4 cost Finland Karelia and Petsamo, and the country remained neutral throughout the cold war. Finland's application to join the European Community was approved by the European Parliament in 1994.

First World War (1914–18), a war between the Central Powers (Germany and Austria-Hungary, joined later by Turkey and Bulgaria) and the Allies (Britain and its dominions, France, Russia, and others, joined later by Italy and the US). Political tensions in central Europe relating mainly to the rise of the German Empire were its principal cause, although it was set off by the assassination of Archduke Franz Ferdinand of Austria by a Bosnian Serb nationalist in Sarajevo on 28 June 1914. This event was used as a pretext by Austria for declaring war on Serbia. Most of the fighting took place on land in Europe (the only significant naval battle was at Jutland in 1916), and was generally characterized by long periods of bloody stalemate. In the east, the demands of the war were a factor in the eventual collapse of Russia in 1917. In the west, an initial German offensive through Belgium was stemmed and a long period of attritional trench warfare ensued (see also WESTERN FRONT). The balance eventually shifted in the Allies' favour in 1917 when the US joined the war, largely in response to the German policy of unrestricted submarine warfare against Atlantic shipping. The stalemate in the west was broken by Allied offensives in 1918; after the retreat of German forces, the war was ended by a series of armistices in late 1918, and peace terms were settled at Versailles in 1919. Total casualties of the war are estimated at 10 million killed. One of the consequences of the war was the collapse of the German, Austro-Hungarian, Russian, and Ottoman empires.

▪ Fish represent a form of life rather than a single related group of animals. The most primitive forms are the jawless fishes, which first appeared about 500 million years ago and are represented today by the lampreys. True jawed fishes appeared about 100 million years later, and present-day forms are divided into two main classes: cartilaginous fish and bony fish. The former are mostly elasmobranchs (sharks, dogfish, skates, and rays), which have a skeleton of cartilage, and lack a swim-bladder to give buoyancy. Bony fish are mostly teleosts, which constitute the great majority of the 30,000 or so living fish species, usually having a swim-bladder, and possessing fins that allow great manoeuvrability.

Fitzgerald¹ /fɪtsˈdʒerəld/, Edward (1809–83), English scholar and poet. He is remembered for his free poetic translation of The Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám (1859).

Fitzgerald² /fɪtsˈdʒerəld/, Ella (1917–96), American jazz singer. In the 1940s she evolved a distinctive style of scat singing. Fitzgerald joined the American impresario Norman Granz (b.1918) on his world tours in 1946, appearing with Count Basie and Duke Ellington. From the mid-1950s she made a successful series of recordings of songs by George Gershwin and Cole Porter.

Fitzgerald³ /fɪtsˈdʒerəld/, F(rancis) Scott (Key) (1896–1940), American novelist. His novels, particularly The Great Gatsby (1925), provide a vivid portrait of the US during the jazz era of the 1920s. From the mid-1920s Fitzgerald and his wife, the writer Zelda Sayre (1900–47), became part of an affluent and fashionable set living on the French Riviera; their lifestyle is reflected in the semi-autobiographical novel Tender is the Night (1934).

FitzGerald⁴ /fɪtsˈdʒerəld/, George Francis (1851–1901), Irish physicist. He suggested that length, time, and mass depend on the relative motion of the observer, while the speed of light is constant. This hypothesis, postulated independently by Lorentz, prepared the way for Einstein's special theory of relativity.

FitzGerald contraction n. (also FitzGerald-Lorentz) Physics the contraction or foreshortening, in a direction parallel to its line of motion, of a body moving relative to an observer. The effect is insignificant except at speeds close to that of light. [FITZGERALD⁴, LORENTZ] fluoresce /flʊəˈres/ v.intr. be or become fluorescent.

fluorescein /ˈflʊərəˌsi:n, -sɪn/ n. Chem. an orange dye with a yellowish-green fluorescence, used in solution as an indicator in biochemistry and medicine. [FLUORESCENCE + -IN] fluorescence /flʊəˈres(ə)ns/ n. 1 the visible or invisible radiation produced from certain substances as a result of incident radiation of a shorter wavelength as X-rays, ultraviolet light, etc. 2 the property of absorbing light of short (invisible) wavelength and emitting light of longer (visible) wavelength. [FLUORSPAR (which fluoresces) after opalescence] fluorescent /flʊəˈres(ə)nt/ adj. (of a substance) having or showing fluorescence. □ fluorescent lamp (or bulb) a lamp or bulb radiating largely by fluorescence, esp. a tubular lamp in which phosphor on the inside surface of the tube is made to fluoresce by ultraviolet radiation from mercury vapour. fluorescent screen a screen coated with fluorescent material to show images from X-rays etc.

fluoridate /ˈflʊərɪˌdeɪt/ v.tr. add traces of fluoride to (drinking-water etc.).

fluoridation /ˌflʊərɪˈdeɪʃ(ə)n/ n. (also fluoridization /-daɪˈzeɪʃ(ə)n/) the addition of traces of fluoride to drinking-water in order to prevent or reduce tooth-decay.

fluoride /ˈflʊəraɪd/ n. Chem. a binary compound of fluorine.

fluorinate /ˈflʊərɪˌneɪt/ v.tr. 1 = FLUORIDATE. 2 introduce fluorine into (a compound) (fluorinated hydrocarbons). □ fluorination /ˌflʊərɪˈneɪʃ(ə)n/ n.

fluorine /ˈflʊəri:n/ n. a pale-yellow gaseous chemical element (atomic number 9; symbol F). Fluorine was identified as an element by Scheele in 1771, but its very difficult and dangerous isolation was not achieved until 1886, by the French chemist Ferdinand Moissan. Fluorine is a halogen and the most reactive of all the elements, causing very severe burns on contact with skin. It occurs in fluorite, cryolite, and other minerals. Fluorine compounds are used to protect against dental decay, and the very unreactive fluorocarbons are used to form non-stick surfaces and as lubricants. [F (as FLUORSPAR)] fluorite /ˈflʊəraɪt/ n. Mineral. a mineral form of calcium fluoride. [It. (as FLUORSPAR)]

fluoro- /ˈflʊərəʊ/ comb. form 1 fluorine (fluorocarbon). 2 fluorescence (fluoroscope). [FLUORINE, FLUORESCENCE] fluorocarbon /ˌflʊərəʊˈkɑ:b(ə)n/ n. Chem. a compound formed by replacing one or more of the hydrogen atoms in a hydrocarbon with fluorine atoms.

fluoroscope /ˈflʊərəˌskəʊp/ n. an instrument with a fluorescent screen on which X-ray images may be viewed without taking and developing X-ray photographs.

fluorosis /flʊəˈrəʊsɪs/ n. poisoning by fluorine or its compounds. [F fluorose (as FLUORO- 1)] fluorspar /ˈflʊəspɑ:(r)/ n. = FLUORITE. [archaic fluor a mineral used as a flux, (later) fluorspar, f. L fluor f. fluere flow + SPAR^3] flurry /ˈflʌrɪ/ n. & v. ● n. (pl. -ies) 1 a gust or squall (of snow, rain, etc.). 2 a sudden burst of activity. 3 a commotion; excitement; nervous agitation (a flurry of speculation; the flurry of the city). ● v.tr. (-ies, -ied) confuse by haste or noise; agitate. [imit.: cf. obs. flurr ruffle, hurry] flush^1 /flʌʃ/ v. & n. ● v. 1 intr. a blush, redden (he flushed with embarrassment). b glow with a warm colour (sky flushed pink). 2 tr. (usu. as flushed adj.) cause to glow, blush, or be elated (often foll. by with: flushed with pride). 3 tr. a cleanse (a drain, lavatory, etc.) by a rushing flow of water. b (often foll. by away, down) dispose of (an object) in this way (flushed away the cigarette). 4 intr. rush out, spurt. 5 tr. flood (the river flushed the meadow). 6 intr. (of a plant) throw out fresh shoots. ● n. 1 a a blush. b a glow of light or colour. 2 a a rush of water. b the cleansing of a drain, lavatory, etc. by flushing. 3 a a rush of emotion. b the elation produced by a victory etc. (the flush of triumph). 4 sudden abundance. 5 freshness; vigour (in the first flush of womanhood). 6 a (also hot flush) a sudden feeling of heat during the menopause. b a feverish temperature. c facial redness, esp. caused by fever, alcohol, etc. 7 a fresh growth of grass etc. □ flusher n. [ME, perh. = FLUSH^4 infl. by flash and blush] flush^2 /flʌʃ/ adj. & v. ● adj. 1 (often foll. by with) in the same plane; level; even (the sink is flush with the cooker; fitted it flush with the wall). 2 (usu. predic.) colloq. a having plenty of money. b (of money) abundant, plentiful. 3 full to overflowing; in flood. ● v.tr. 1 make (surfaces) level. 2 fill in (a joint) level with a surface. □ flushness n. [prob. f. FLUSH^1] flush^3 /flʌʃ/ n. a hand of cards all of one suit, esp. in poker. □ royal flush a straight poker flush headed by an ace. straight flush a flush that is a numerical sequence. [OF flus, flux f. L fluxus FLUX]

flush^4 /flʌʃ/ v. 1 tr. cause (esp. a game bird) to fly up from cover. 2 intr. (of a bird) fly up and away. □ flush out 1 reveal. 2 drive out. [ME, imit.: cf. fly, rush]

Flushing /ˈflʌʃɪŋ/ (Dutch Vlissingen /ˈvlɪsɪŋə/) a port in the SW Netherlands; pop. (1991) 43,800.

fluster /ˈflʌstə(r)/ v. & n. ● v. 1 tr. & intr. make or become nervous or confused; flurry (was flustered by the noise; he flusters easily). 2 tr. confuse with drink; half-intoxicate. 3 intr. bustle. ● n. a confused or agitated state. [ME: orig. unkn.: cf. Icel. flaustr(a) hurry, bustle] folk music n. instrumental or vocal music of traditional origin, transmitted orally from generation to generation, whose authorship is often unknown. Folk music tends to have a relatively simple structure and melody, and to use portable instruments such as guitar, violin, harmonica, accordion, and bagpipes. Folk music is often monophonic, consisting of simple unaccompanied tunes, although vocal polyphony is common in southern and eastern Europe. While in some regions of Europe (e.g. Bulgaria, Romania, the Basque country, Macedonia, etc.) there has been an uninterrupted tradition of living folk music, concern began to be felt in the late 19th century in Britain and elsewhere that the folk tradition would be lost. Pioneering collectors and revivers of folk music include Cecil Sharp and Percy Grainger in Britain, Dvořák in Bohemia and Moravia, and Bartók and Kodály in Transylvania. During the Depression years in the US, Woody Guthrie revived interest in the form with his political protest songs; he had a strong influence on later figures such as Bob Dylan, who performed traditional folk material and also wrote new songs in a folk style. In Britain in the 1960s and 1970s groups such as Fairport Convention and Steeleye Span explored and expanded the form; electronic and other less traditional instruments began to be used, giving rise to a style known as folk rock. Recently much attention has been given to folk music from other cultures (see world music).

- Force in physics is that which causes a mass to undergo acceleration or deformation, or the quantity 'mass times acceleration' itself. Forces were first described mathematically by Newton in his laws of motion, and the present-day standard unit of force, the newton, is named after him. Newton showed that a force is not, as earlier thinkers had supposed, necessary for maintaining motion itself; its effect is rather to cause a body to tend to accelerate (or decelerate). Physical phenomena are now believed to be ultimately dependent on four fundamental forces that govern the interaction between all particles of matter: the strong nuclear force which binds protons and neutrons to one another in the atomic nucleus; the weak nuclear force responsible for some radioactive phenomena; the electromagnetic force acting between charged particles; and the gravitational force.

Ford^{1} /fɔ:d/, Ford Madox (born Ford Hermann Hueffer) (1873–1939), English novelist. He was the grandson of the Pre-Raphaelite painter Ford Madox Brown (1821–93) and is chiefly remembered as the author of the novel The Good Soldier (1915). As founder of both the English Review (1908) and the Transatlantic Review (1924), he published works by such writers as Ernest Hemingway, James Joyce, and Ezra Pound.

Ford^{2} /fɔ:d/, Gerald R(udolph) (b.1913), American Republican statesman, 38th President of the US 1974–7. He became President on the resignation of Richard Nixon in the wake of the Watergate affair. The free pardon he granted Nixon two months later aroused controversy.

Ford^{3} /fɔ:d/, Harrison (b.1942), American actor. He made his screen début in 1966. Ford became internationally famous with his leading roles in the science-fiction film Star Wars (1977) and its two sequels, and in the adventure film Raiders of the Lost Ark (1981) and its two sequels (including Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom, 1984). Other films include The Fugitive (1993).

Ford^{4} /fɔ:d/, Henry (1863–1947), American motor manufacturer. He was a pioneer of mass production and had a profound influence on the widespread use of motor vehicles. By 1903 he had evolved a reliable car and founded his own firm, the Ford Motor Company. In 1909 Ford produced his famous Model T, of which 15 million were made over the next 19 years at gradually reducing prices due to large-scale manufacture, a succession of simple assembly tasks, and the use of a conveyor belt. He went on to produce a cheap and effective farm tractor, the Fordson, which had a great effect on agricultural mechanization. Control of the Ford Motor Company passed to his grandson, Henry Ford II (1917–1987), in 1945 and today it is a huge multinational corporation. Among the first Henry Ford's philanthropic legacies is the Ford Foundation (established 1936), a major charitable trust.

Ford^{5} /fɔ:d/, John (born Sean Aloysius O'Feeney) (1895–1973), American film director. He is chiefly known for his westerns, which depict the early pioneers and celebrate the frontier spirit. His many films starring John Wayne include Stagecoach (1939) and She Wore a Yellow Ribbon (1949). Notable films in other genres include The Grapes of Wrath (1940), for which he won an Oscar.

forestry /ˈfɒrɪstrɪ/ n. 1 the science or management of forests. (See note below.) 2 wooded country; forests.

- Forests are a source of many valuable commodities besides timber, such as wood pulp for papermaking, rubber, resin, dyes, gums, and other chemical or pharmaceutical products. Forestry is concerned with the management of forests as a renewable resource by control of density and composition, protection from pests and disease, planned harvesting, and appropriate replanting. These practices have been applied mainly in the coniferous forests of the north; elsewhere forests have often been exploited and destroyed rather than managed. (See also DEFORESTATION.)

His theory of the diffusion of heat involved him in the solution of partial differential equations by the method of separation of variables and superposition. This led him to study the series and integrals that are now known by his name. His belief that a wide class of periodic phenomena could be described by means of Fourier series was substantially vindicated by later mathematicians, and this theory now provides one of the most important methods for solving many partial differential equations that occur in physics and engineering.

Fourier analysis n. Math. the resolution of periodic data into harmonic functions using a Fourier series.

Fourier series n. Math. an infinite series of trigonometric functions representing or approximating a given periodic function.

- The domestic fowl is derived from the Indian red jungle fowl, Gallus gallus, which was domesticated at least 4,000 years ago. Many breeds have been developed, including bantams and others kept mainly for show, and some types used for cockfighting. It has become the basis of a massive industry, and highly intensive (and controversial) methods are used to rear and keep the birds in order to provide a cheap supply of meat and eggs.

Fowler /ˈfaʊlə(r)/, H(enry) W(atson) (1858–1933), English lexicographer and grammarian. With his brother F(rancis) G(eorge) Fowler (1870–1918), he compiled the first Concise Oxford Dictionary (1911). He is most famous for his moderately prescriptive guide to style and idiom, Modern English Usage, first published in 1926.

France^1 /frɑːns/ a country in western Europe; pop. (1990) 56,556,000; official language, French; capital, Paris. Julius Caesar subdued the area in the 1st century BC and it became the Roman province of Gaul. It was politically splintered by barbarian invasions from the 3rd century onwards and, although briefly united under the Merovingian and Carolingian kings, did not emerge as a unified state until the ejection of the English and Burgundians at the end of the Middle Ages. France became a major power under the Valois and Bourbon dynasties in the 16th–18th centuries, and, after the overthrow of the monarchy in the French Revolution, briefly dominated Europe under Napoleon. France was defeated in the Franco-Prussian War (1870–1) and suffered much destruction and loss of life in the First World War. During the Second World War France was occupied by the Germans and nominally controlled by a French puppet government based in Vichy. The postwar period saw France involved in war with the Vietminh in French Indo-China (1946–54). During the 1950s France was also in conflict with Algeria over that country's independence. France was a founder member of the EEC in 1957, and under Charles de Gaulle successfully rebuilt its economy in the 1960s.

France^{2} /froːns/, Anatole (pseudonym of Jacques-Anatole-François Thibault) (1844–1924), French writer. He achieved success as a novelist with Le Crime de Sylvestre Bonnard (1881). His later work was more satirical, notably L'Île des pingouins (1908), an ironic version of the Dreyfus case, and Les Dieux ont soif (1912), a study of fanaticism during the French Revolution. He was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1921.

Franche-Comté /ˌfroːnʃkom'teɪ/ a region of eastern France, in the northern foothills of the Jura mountains. Originally part of the kingdom of Burgundy, it was independent from 1137 to 1384. After a period of Habsburg rule, it was annexed by France in 1678.

Francis /'froːnsɪs/, Richard Stanley ('Dick') (b.1920), English jockey and writer. He was champion jockey 1953–4 and began writing after his retirement in 1957. He has written a series of thrillers, mostly set in the world of horse-racing.

Francis I /'froːnsɪs/ (1494–1547), king of France 1515–47. He succeeded his cousin Louis XII in 1515 and soon afterwards took the duchy of Milan. The greater part of his reign (1521–44) was spent at war with the Holy Roman emperor Charles V, with the result that Francis relinquished all claims to Italy. In the early years of his reign Francis generally practised religious toleration towards supporters of the Reformation, although his policies became harsher from the mid-1530s. A noted patron of the arts, he supported Rabelais and Cellini, and commissioned many new buildings in Paris, including the Louvre.

Franciscan /fræn'sɪskən/ n. & adj. ● n. a friar, nun, or sister of a Christian order founded in 1209 by St Francis of Assisi. (See note below.) ● adj. of St Francis or his order. [F franciscain f. mod.L Franciscanus f. Franciscus Francis]

- The rule for the Franciscan order originally laid down by St Francis in 1209 (including a vow of complete poverty) was felt to be too strict; it was rewritten in 1221 and received papal approval in 1223. The debate about degrees of strictness continued, however, and eventually resulted in the division of the order of friars into three branches: the Friars Minor of the Observance (or Observants), the Friars Minor Capuchin, and the Friars Minor Conventual. The Observants and the Conventuals (the least strict of the branches) separated in 1517; the strictest branch is that of the Capuchins, whose rule was drawn up in 1529. The Franciscan nuns, of an order founded by St Clare (*c.*1212) under the guidance of St Francis, are known as Poor Clares. There is also a third order of tertiaries or lay brothers and sisters (founded 1221). The friars have been important preachers and missionaries. There is also a Franciscan order in the Anglican Church.

Francis of Assisi, St (born Giovanni di Bernardone) (*c.*1181–1226), Italian monk, founder of the Franciscan order. Born into a wealthy family, he renounced his inheritance in favour of a life of poverty after experiencing a personal call to rebuild the semi-derelict church of San Damiano of Assisi. He soon attracted followers, founding the Franciscan order in 1209 and drawing up its original rule (based on complete poverty). His generosity, simple faith, deep humility, and love of nature have made him one of the most cherished saints. Feast day, 4 Oct.

Francis of Sales, St /sɑːl/ (1567–1622), French bishop. One of the leaders of the Counter-Reformation, he was bishop of Geneva (1602–22) and co-founder of the Order of the Visitation, an order of nuns (1610). The Salesian order (founded in 1859) is named after him. Feast day, 24 Jan.

Francis Xavier, St, see XAVIER, ST FRANCIS.

francium /'frænsɪəm/ n. a radioactive metallic chemical element (atomic number 87; symbol Fr). Francium was discovered in 1939 by the French scientist Marguerite Perey (1909–75); it is the heaviest member of the alkali-metal group. It only occurs naturally as a radioactive decay product; all its isotopes have short half-lives, the most stable about 22 minutes. [f. FRANCE^{1}, the country of its discoverer]

Franck^{1} /froŋk/, César (Auguste) (1822–90), Belgian-born French composer. He was a noted organist, becoming organ professor at the Paris Conservatoire in 1872. His reputation rests on a few works composed late in life, particularly the Symphonic Variations for piano and orchestra (1885), the D minor Symphony (1886–8), and the String Quartet (1889).

Franck^{2} /fræŋk/, James (1882–1964), German-born American physicist. He worked on the bombardment of atoms by electrons, and found that the atoms absorb and lose energy in discrete increments or quanta. He then studied the vibration and rotation of dissociated molecules. After moving to America in 1935 he eventually joined the atom bomb project, and in the Franck report, completed in 1945, he and other scientists proposed the explosion of the bomb in an uninhabited area to demonstrate its power to Japan, rather than using it directly in war.

Franco /'fræŋkəʊ/, Francisco (1892–1975), Spanish general and statesman, head of state 1939–75. After commanding the Spanish Foreign Legion in Morocco, Franco was among the leaders of the military uprising against the Republican government which led to the Spanish Civil War. In 1937 he became leader of the Falange (Fascist) Party and proclaimed himself 'Caudillo' (leader) of Spain. With the surrender of Madrid and the defeat of the republic in 1939, he took control of the government and established a dictatorship. Despite pressure from Germany and Italy, Franco kept Spain neutral during the Second World War. In 1969 he named Prince Juan Carlos as his successor and heir to the reconstituted Spanish throne.

Frege /'freɪgə/, Gottlob (1848–1925), German philosopher and mathematician, founder of modern logic. He developed a logical system for the expression of mathematics which was a great improvement on the syllogistic logic which it replaced, and he also worked on general questions of philosophical logic and semantics. His theory of meaning, based on his use of a distinction between what a linguistic term refers to and what it expresses, is still influential. Frege tried to provide a rigorous foundation for mathematics on the basis of purely logical principles, but abandoned the attempt when Bertrand Russell, on whose work he had a profound influence, pointed out that his system was inconsistent.

▪ French is spoken as a first language by over 200 million people in France and neighbouring European countries, in parts of Canada, and in a number of African states, having spread as a result of French colonization. It is a Romance language which developed from the Latin spoken in Gaul after its conquest in 58–51 BC. A number of dialects of French arose, but the northern dialects became dominant after Paris became the French capital in the 10th century. From the 11th to the 14th century France was the leading country in Europe and its influence and language spread, so that in most European countries it became customary for the upper classes to learn French, while from the 13th century until well into the 20th century it was the language of international diplomacy. In 1635 the French Academy was founded (see ACADÉMIE FRANÇAISE), determining what should be considered correct French; modern literary French remains much the same as the language of the 17th century. (See also PROVENÇAL, ANGLO-FRENCH.)

It became an overseas territory of France in 1946, and was granted partial autonomy in 1977.

French Revolution the overthrow of the Bourbon monarchy in France (1789–99), the profound political and social effects of which mark a turning point in French history. It was the first of a series of European political upheavals, in which various groups in French society found common cause in opposing the feudal structure of the state, with its privileged Establishment and discredited monarchy. It began with the meeting of the legislative assembly (the States General) in May 1789, when the French government was already in crisis; the Bastille was stormed in July of the same year. The Revolution became steadily more radical and ruthless with power increasingly in the hands of the Jacobins and Robespierre, who in 1793 gained control of the Committee of Public Safety, a governing body originally dominated by Danton. Louis XVI's execution in Jan. 1793 was followed by Robespierre's Reign of Terror (Sept. 1793–July 1794). The Revolution failed to produce a stable form of republican government and after several different forms of administration the last, the Directory, was overthrown by Napoleon in 1799.

- The fresco painter has to work rapidly, before the plaster dries, and corrections are almost impossible; but, once completed, the fresco will last as long as the wall itself. Fresco was used in the wall-paintings at Pompeii, and by the great masters of the Italian Renaissance, Giotto, Masaccio, Piero della Francesca, Raphael, and Michelangelo. It works best in dry climates, and has been used chiefly in Italy and rarely in northern Europe, although attempts were made to revive it by the German Nazarenes and English Pre-Raphaelites in the 19th century. Its most notable revival in the 20th century, stimulated by the work of the Mexican painter Diego Rivera, was in Latin America and the US.

Fresnel /ˈfreɪn(ə)l, French frɛnɛl/, Augustin Jean (1788–1827), French physicist and civil engineer. He took up the study of polarized light and postulated that light moves in a wavelike motion, which had already been suggested by, among others, Christiaan Huygens and Thomas Young. They, however, assumed the waves to be longitudinal, while Fresnel was sure that they vibrated transversely to the direction of propagation, and he used this to explain successfully the phenomenon of double refraction. He invented the lens that is named after him.

Freud¹ /frɔɪd/, Lucian (b.1922), German-born painter, grandson of Sigmund Freud. He came to Britain in 1931, becoming a British citizen in 1939. Since the 1950s he has established a reputation as a powerful figurative painter. His subjects, especially his portraits and nudes, are painted in a meticulously detailed style based on firm draughtsmanship, often using striking angles.

Freud² /frɔɪd/, Sigmund (1856–1939), Austrian neurologist and psychotherapist. He was the first to draw attention to the significance of unconscious processes in normal and neurotic behaviour, and was the founder of psychoanalysis as both a theory of personality and a therapeutic practice (see PSYCHOANALYSIS). He proposed the existence of an unconscious element in the mind which influences consciousness, and of conflicts in it between various sets of forces. Freud also emphasized the importance of a child's semiconsciousness of sex as a factor in mental development, while his theory of the sexual origin of neuroses aroused great controversy. His works include The Interpretation of Dreams (1899), Totem and Taboo (1913), and The Ego and the Id (1923).

Fuller^1 /ˈfʊlə(r)/, R(ichard) Buckminster (1895–1983), American designer and architect. An advocate of the use of technology to produce efficiency in many aspects of life, he is best known for his postwar invention of the geodesic dome. These domes enable large spaces to be enclosed with great efficiency—in line with Fuller's ideals of using the world's resources with maximum purpose and least waste.

Fuller^2 /ˈfʊlə(r)/, Thomas (1608–61), English cleric and historian. He is chiefly remembered for The History of the Worthies of England (1662), a description of the counties with short biographies of local personages.

functionalism /'fʌŋkʃənəˌlɪz(ə)m/ n. 1 in the arts, the doctrine that the design of an object should be determined solely by its function, rather than by aesthetic considerations, and that anything practically designed will be inherently beautiful. Although similar ideas are found in ancient Greek thought and in 18th-century aesthetic theory, it was not until the 20th century that functionalism was established as a new aesthetic, primarily in architecture, where it is associated particularly with figures such as Le Corbusier (who defined a house as 'a machine for living in'), Frank Lloyd Wright, and Mies van der Rohe. Functionalism had a strong impact on industrial design (e.g. of furniture) of the 1930s and after. 2 in the social sciences, the theory that all aspects of a society serve a function and are necessary for the survival of that society. Functionalism gained ground among 19th-century sociologists such as Émile Durkheim and was also adopted by early 20th-century anthropologists such as Bronislaw Malinowski. □ functionalist n. & adj.

(See note below.) 2 strict maintenance of ancient or fundamental doctrines of any religion, esp. Islam. (See ISLAMIC FUNDAMENTALISM.) □ fundamentalist n. & adj.

- Christian fundamentalism in America grew out of millenarian thinking of the 19th century, stressing a literal interpretation of the Bible and hence a belief in, for example, the physical second coming of Christ and the virgin birth. It gained momentum in the early 20th century specifically as a reaction against the growth of liberalism, and in the 1950s came to be associated with anti-Communism. In more recent years fundamentalist groups also fostered the emergence of the right-wing Moral Majority, ran a campaign to insist on creationist teaching in American schools, and generally opposed abortion and homosexual rights.

▪ Fungi lack chlorophyll and are therefore incapable of photosynthesis. Many play an ecologically vital role in breaking down dead organic matter, some are an important source of antibiotics or are used in fermentation, and others cause disease. The familiar mushrooms and toadstools are merely the fruiting bodies of organisms that exist mainly as a threadlike mycelium in the soil. Some fungi form associations with other plants, growing with algae to form lichens, or in the roots of higher plants to form mycorrhizas. Although believed to be an ancient group, fungi are scarce as fossils. Their relationship with other plants is obscure, and they are now often classified as a separate kingdom distinct from the green plants.

▪ Galaxies may be elliptical, irregular, or disc-shaped in form, and frequently have well-defined spiral arms. The Galaxy in which the earth is located is a collection of approximately 100,000 million stars. It has two main components: the halo, about 50,000 light-years across, containing a sparse population of cool dim stars and globular clusters, and the disc, 100,000 light-years across but only a few thousand light-years thick, rich in gas, dust, and young stars, with the spiral arms indicating the regions of most recent star formation. Our sun is located about two-thirds of the way out from the centre. The centre of the disc has an almost spherical nuclear bulge containing powerful radio and infrared sources, apparently associated with disturbed complexes of ionized hydrogen. These streaming gas-clouds behave as if ejected explosively from something not yet understood, perhaps a massive black hole, at the exact centre. (See also Milky Way.)

Galba /'gælbə/ (full name Servius Sulpicius Galba) (*c.*3 BC–AD 69), Roman emperor AD 68–9. He was a governor in Spain when invited to succeed Nero as emperor in AD 68. Once in power, he aroused hostility by his severity and parsimony, as well as alienating the legions in Germany by removing their commander. In AD 69 he was murdered in a conspiracy organized by Otho.

Galen /'geɪlən/ (129–99), Greek physician (full name Claudios Galenos; Latin name Claudius Galenus). He spent the latter part of his life in Rome, becoming court physician to the emperor Marcus Aurelius in 169. He was the author of numerous works which attempted to systematize the whole of medicine, and was especially productive as a practical anatomist and experimental physiologist. He demonstrated that the arteries carry blood not (as had been thought) air, but postulated the presence of minute pores in the wall between the ventricles of the heart, allowing blood to pass through, a theory which was accepted until medieval times. His works reached Europe in the 12th century and were widely influential.

Galileo Galilei /ˌgælɪˌleɪəʊ ˌgælɪ'leɪi/ (1564–1642), Italian astronomer and physicist, one of the founders of modern science. His discoveries include the constancy of a pendulum's swing, later applied to the regulation of clocks. He formulated the law of uniform acceleration of falling bodies, and described the parabolic trajectory of projectiles. Galileo applied the telescope to astronomy and observed craters on the moon, sunspots, the stars of the Milky Way, Jupiter's satellites, and the phases of Venus. His acceptance of the Copernican system was rejected by the Catholic Church, and under threat of torture from the Inquisition he publicly recanted his heretical views.

galleon /ˈgælɪən/ n. a type of sailing-ship that was developed from the carrack in the late 16th century, originally as a warship. The elimination of the high forecastle (which caught the wind), with which all large ships were then built, produced a ship that was more weatherly and manoeuvrable. Although the design was essentially English, the galleon was mainly developed in Spain, and formed part of the Spanish Armada of 1588. In general the galleon was used both as a warship and a trading ship, and became the principal trading ship of the 17th century. As a warship the galleon was gradually replaced during the 17th and 18th centuries by the ship of the line and an early version of the cruiser, while Spain continued to use it for trade until the late 17th century. [ME f. OF galie f. med.L galea, med.Gk galaia]

▪ The galley was the oared fighting-ship of the Mediterranean, dating from about 3000 BC and lasting into the 18th century. Such ships had up to three banks of oars (as in the trireme) as well as one or more sails, which were lowered or beached before action. The weapon was the ram, a pointed spur fixed to the bow of the galley on or just below the waterline; the ancient Greek technique of fighting was to ram and then depart at speed, while the Romans preferred to grapple and fight on deck, or use catapult weapons. Slaves and criminals were later sometimes used as rowers, although free men were preferred as being more reliable in battle. With its slim light-draught design the galley was an unstable vessel suitable only for calm waters.

Gandhi^1 /ˈɡændɪ/, Mrs Indira (1917–84), Indian stateswoman, Prime Minister 1966–77 and 1980–4. The daughter of Jawaharlal Nehru, she had already served as president of the Indian National Congress (1959–60) and Minister of Information (1964) when she succeeded Lal Bahadur Shastri (1904–66) as Prime Minister. In her first term of office she sought to establish a secular state and to lead India out of poverty. However, in 1975 she introduced an unpopular state of emergency to deal with growing political unrest, and the Congress Party lost the 1977 election. Mrs Gandhi lost her seat and was unsuccessfully tried for corruption. Having formed a breakaway group from the Congress Party – known as the Indian National Congress (I) – in 1978, she was elected Prime Minister again in 1980. Her second period of office was marked by prolonged religious disturbance, during which she alienated many Sikhs by allowing troops to storm the Golden Temple at Amritsar; she was assassinated by her own Sikh bodyguards.

Gandhi^{2} /ˈgændɪ/, Mahatma (born Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi) (1869–1948), Indian nationalist and spiritual leader. After early civil-rights activities as a lawyer in South Africa, in 1914 Gandhi returned to India, where he became prominent in the opposition to British rule, pursuing a policy of passive resistance and non-violent civil disobedience. The president of the Indian National Congress (1925–34), he never held government office, but was regarded as the country's supreme political and spiritual leader and the principal force in achieving India's independence. He was assassinated by a Hindu following his agreement to the creation of the state of Pakistan for the Muslim minority.

- The Order of the Garter was founded by Edward III *c.*1344. The traditional story of the order's founding is that the garter was that of the Countess of Salisbury, which the king placed on his own leg after it fell off while she was dancing with him. The king's comment to those present, 'Honi soit qui mal y pense' (shame be to him who thinks evil of it), was adopted as the motto of the order, which became the highest in English knighthood and the model for others founded by other late medieval kings. The badge of the order is a garter of dark blue velvet bearing the motto embroidered in gold; garters also form part of the ornament of the collar worn by members.

- Different 'airs', vapours, and exhalations were recognized in antiquity and classified with the element 'air', distinguishing them from the other Aristotelian elements, earth, water, and fire. It was not until the second half of the 18th century that different chemical species of gases were clearly distinguished and identified, and recognized as elements in their own right. During the same period the four Aristotelian elements were definitively replaced by three states of matter — solid, liquid, and gas. In gases, the atoms or molecules are not bound together and can move about relatively independently. (See also KINETIC THEORY.)
- The technical founder of the modern gas industry was William Murdock (1754–1839), a Scotsman, who prepared coal gas, and in 1792 succeeded in lighting his office with it. In 1807 a street in London was lit with gas, and gas soon began to be used for cooking and heating as well. In the second half of the 20th century coal gas tended to be replaced as a fuel by natural gas, large deposits of which are found under the North Sea and in Russia, the US, Algeria, Iran, the Netherlands, Saudi Arabia, and Kuwait.

Gauguin /ˈgəʊgæn/, (Eugène Henri) Paul (1848–1903), French painter. He left Paris in search of an environment that would bring him closer to nature, going first to Brittany, where he painted works such as The Vision After the Sermon (1888), and later briefly to stay with Van Gogh at Arles. In 1891 he left France for Tahiti; he spent most of the rest of his life there, painting enigmatic works such as Faa Iheihe (1898). He was a post-impressionist whose painting was influenced by primitive art, freeing colour from its representational function to use it in flat contrasting areas to achieve decorative or emotional effects. His work influenced both the Nabi Group and the symbolist movement.

Genet /ʒəˈneɪ/, Jean (1910–86), French novelist, poet, and dramatist. He began to write while serving a prison sentence; much of his work portrayed life in the criminal and homosexual underworlds, of which he was a part, and his first novel Notre-Dame des fleurs (Our Lady of the Flowers) caused a sensation when it was first published in 1944. He also wrote the autobiographical Journal du voleur (1949, The Thief's Journal) and a number of plays, including Les Bonnes (1947, The Maids) and Les Nègres (1958).

genet /ˈdʒenɪt/ n. (also genette /dʒɪˈnet/) 1 a catlike mammal of the genus Genetta, native to Africa and southern Europe, with spotted fur and a long ringed bushy tail. 2 the fur of the genet. [ME f. OF genete f. Arab. jarnaiṭ] genetic /dʒɪˈnetɪk/ adj. 1 of genetics or genes; inherited. 2 of, in, or concerning origin; causal. □ genetically adv. [GENESIS after antithetic] genetically modified adj. (of genetic material, esp. that of food crops) artificially manipulated in order to produce a desired characteristic.

genetic code n. Biochem. the means by which DNA and RNA molecules carry genetic information in living cells. Each triplet of three bases codes for a particular amino acid, so that a sequence of such triplets embodies the instructions for making a specific protein. (See also DNA.)

genetic engineering n. the deliberate modification of the characters of an organism by the manipulation of genetic material. The purpose of genetic engineering is to introduce desirable properties of one organism into another. Two lines of approach have produced results in the last two decades. The first, the production of cultures of hybrid cells, has been used to produce monoclonal antibodies. Recombinant DNA techniques are capable of transferring genetic activity from one organism to another. DNA fragments known to confer the desired activity are isolated and then spliced into DNA from the host organism; these processes are carried out using particular enzymes. Recombinant DNA methods are used, for example, to transform bacteria into forms able to synthesize particular biochemicals (such as insulin, now manufactured in this way). Genetically engineered organisms can now be patented.

genetic fingerprinting n. (also genetic profiling) the analysis of DNA from samples of bodily tissues or fluids in order to identify individuals. It is possible to locate patterns in genetic material which are believed (except in cases of identical twins) to be specific to the person or animal from which the sample came. The technique has been used in forensic analysis (the first conviction based on the technique was obtained in 1987), in the determination of parentage, and to establish whether twins are identical.

genetics /dʒɪˈnetɪks/ n.pl. (usu. treated as sing.) the study of heredity and the variation of inherited characteristics. □ geneticist /-tɪsɪst/ n.

Genghis Khan /ˌɡeŋɡɪs ˈkɑːn, ˌdʒeŋ-/ (1162–1227), the founder of the Mongol empire. Originally named Temujin, he took the name Genghis Khan (= 'ruler of all') in 1206 after uniting the nomadic Mongol tribes under his command and becoming master of both eastern and western Mongolia. He then attacked China, capturing Beijing in 1215. When he died his empire extended from the shores of the Pacific to the northern shores of the Black Sea. His grandson Kublai Khan completed the conquest of China.

George^{1} /dʒɔːdʒ/ the name of four kings of Great Britain and Ireland, one of Great Britain and Ireland (from 1920 of the United Kingdom), and one of the United Kingdom:

George I (1660–1727), great-grandson of James I, reigned 1714–27, Elector of Hanover 1698–1727. George succeeded to the British throne as a result of the Act of Settlement (1701). Unpopular in England as a foreigner who never learned English, he left the administration of his new kingdom to his ministers and devoted himself to diplomacy and the interests of Hanover. However, the relatively easy suppression of the Jacobite uprisings of 1715 and 1719 demonstrated that he was generally preferred to the Catholic Old Pretender (James Stuart, see STUART^{3}).

George II (1683–1760), son of George I, reigned 1727–60, Elector of Hanover 1727–60. Like his father, he depended heavily on his ministers, although he took an active part in the War of the Austrian Succession (1740–8), successfully leading a British army against the French at Dettingen in 1743, the last occasion on which a British king was present on the field of battle. In the latter years of his reign, George largely withdrew from active politics, allowing advances in the development of constitutional monarchy which his successor George III was ultimately unable to reverse.

George III (1738–1820), grandson of George II, reigned 1760–1820, Elector of Hanover 1760–1815 and king of Hanover 1815–20. He took great interest in British domestic politics and attempted to exercise royal control of government to the fullest possible extent. His determination to suppress the War of American Independence dominated British foreign policy 1775–83, but his political influence declined from 1788 after a series of bouts of mental illness. In 1811 it became clear that the king's mental health made him unfit to rule and his son was made regent.

George IV (1762–1830), son of George III, reigned 1820–30. Known as a patron of the arts and bon viveur, he was Prince Regent during his father's final period of mental illness. His lifestyle gained him a bad reputation which was further damaged by his attempt to divorce his estranged wife Caroline of Brunswick just after coming to the throne. His only child, Charlotte, died in 1817.

George V (1865–1936), son of Edward VII, reigned 1910–36. He won respect for his punctilious attitude towards royal duties and responsibilities, especially during the First World War. He exercised restrained but none the less important influence over British politics, playing an especially significant role in the formation of the government in 1931.

George VI (1894–1952), son of George V, reigned 1936–52. He was created Duke of York in 1920 and came to the throne on the abdication of his elder brother Edward VIII. Despite a retiring disposition he became a popular monarch, gaining respect for the staunch example he and his family set during the London Blitz.

George^{2} /dʒɔːdʒ/ n. Brit. sl. the automatic pilot of an aircraft. [the name George]

George, St, patron saint of England. Little is known of his life, and his historical existence was once challenged but is now generally accepted. He may have been martyred near Lydda in Palestine some time before the reign of Constantine (d.337), but his cult did not become popular until the 6th century. The slaying of the dragon (possibly derived from the legend of Perseus) was not attributed to him until the 12th century. His rank as patron saint of England (in place of St Edward the Confessor) probably dates from the reign of Edward III. The latter founded the Order of the Garter (*c.*1344) under the patronage of St George, who by that time was honoured as the ideal of chivalry. Feast day, 23 Apr.

George Cross n. (also George Medal) (in the UK) each of two (different) decorations for bravery awarded esp. to civilians, instituted in 1940 by King George VI.

georgette /dʒɔːˈdʒet/ n. a thin silk or crêpe dress-material. [Georgette de la Plante (fl. *c.*1900), Fr. dressmaker]

Georgia /ˈdʒɔːdʒə/ 1 a country of SE Europe, on the eastern shore of the Black Sea; pop. (1989) 5,478,000; languages, Georgian (official), Russian, and Armenian; capital, Tbilisi. Georgia was an independent kingdom in medieval times until divided between Persia and Turkey in 1555. It was acquired by the Russian empire in the 19th century, and after the Russian Revolution of 1917 it was absorbed into the Soviet Union, becoming first (1922) part of the Transcaucasian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, and later, in 1936, a constituent republic of the USSR. On the breakup of the USSR in 1991, Georgia became an independent republic outside the Commonwealth of Independent States. Since then separatist movements among the Abkhazian and South Ossetian minorities have led to outbreaks of ethnic conflict. 2 a state of the south-eastern US, on the Atlantic coast; pop. (1990) 5,463,100; capital, Atlanta. Founded as an English colony in 1732 and named after George II, it became one of the original thirteen states of the Union (1788).

Georgian^{1} /ˈdʒɔːdʒən/ adj. 1 a of or characteristic of the time of kings George I–IV (1714–1830). b designating or resembling the style of architecture characteristic of this period. (See note below.) 2 a of or characteristic of the time of kings George V and VI (1910–52). b of or relating to British literature of 1910–20, especially poetry (by writers such as Rupert Brooke) characterized by pastoral themes and strongly attacked by the early modernists.

▪ Georgian architecture encompassed a wide range of styles, such as Palladianism, neoclassicism, and chinoiserie. It is perhaps best exemplified by the simplicity and restraint of the typical red-brick house of the latter half of the period, with regularly spaced windows, white paintwork, and pedimented doorway, and by the rather grander stone-built terraces and crescents in cities such as Bath and Edinburgh.

Germany /'dʒɜːmənɪ/ (called in German Deutschland) a country in central Europe; pop. (1991) 78,700,000; official language, German; capital, Berlin; seat of government, Bonn. In the early history of the region German tribes came repeatedly into conflict with the Romans, and after the collapse of the Roman Empire they overran the Rhine which had been its northern frontier. Loosely unified under the Holy Roman Empire during the Middle Ages, the multiplicity of small German states achieved real unity only with the rise of Prussia and the formation of the German Empire in the mid-19th century. After being defeated in the First World War, Germany was taken over in the 1930s by the Nazi dictatorship which led to a policy of expansionism and eventually to complete defeat in the Second World War. Germany was occupied for a time by the victorious Allies during which it was partitioned; some territory in the east, including East Prussia, was lost, mainly to Poland and the USSR. The western part (including West Berlin), which was occupied by the US, Britain, and France, became the Federal Republic of Germany (West Germany), with its capital at Bonn. The eastern part, occupied by the Soviet Union, became the German Democratic Republic (East Germany), with its capital in East Berlin. West Germany emerged as a major European industrial power within the Western defence community, and was a founder member of the EEC, while the East remained under Soviet domination. After the general collapse of Communism in eastern Europe towards the end of 1989, East and West Germany reunited on 3 Oct. 1990. Germany remains the strongest economy within the EC, although the costs of reunification have strained the country's resources.

gestalt /gə'stɑːlt, -'ʃtɑːlt/ n. Psychol. an organized whole that is perceived as more than the sum of its parts. □ gestaltism n. gestaltist n. [G, = form, shape] gestalt psychology n. a movement in psychology founded in Germany in 1912 by three psychologists, Max Wertheimer (1880–1943), Wolfgang Köhler (1887–1967), and Kurt Koffka (1886–1941). Formed in response to previous theories of perception which tended to analyse perception and experience by breaking them down into their constituent parts, gestalt psychology was an attempt to explain human perception in terms of gestalts; it aimed to show how the mind can perceive organized wholes by understanding relations between otherwise unconnected physical stimuli, a commonly given example being that of the illusion of the moving picture created from a series of 'stills'. Gestalt principles were later used in numerous other fields, including learning, aesthetics, and psychotherapy.

- Because of its special properties of transparency and resistance to corrosion, glass has found widespread uses for windows, food containers, chemical apparatus, and optical lenses. It has the property of being smoothly and reversibly converted to a liquid by the application of heat. Objects composed of glass paste appeared in Egypt *c.*1500 BC, made by modelling or moulding molten glass. The invention of glass-blowing in the 1st century BC (probably in Syria) enabled cheaper mass production of glass objects. Evidence for window glass made by rolling has been found at Pompeii. The addition of particular minerals produces special properties: lead oxide, for instance, is used in crystal and cut glass, and borax produces glass with low thermal expansion suitable for cookware and laboratory equipment; other minerals are used to add colour.

global warming n. the increase in average temperatures on the earth caused by the greenhouse effect. While there is broad scientific agreement that an increase is occurring, its likely extent is uncertain. An average rise of up to 5 °C by the year 2100 has been predicted, which would cause a significant raising of sea level, due to melting of polar ice, and unpredictable climatic changes, probably with far-reaching consequences. Remedial measures would include reducing the world's production of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases, and reversing the trend of deforestation. A UN conference in Brazil in 1992 produced an international commitment to address the problem but did not set firm targets for action.

Gnosticism /ˈnɒstɪˌsɪz(ə)m/ n. a heretical movement prominent in the Christian Church in the 2nd century, in part at least of pre-Christian origin and with ideas drawn from Greek philosophy and other pagan sources. Gnostics emphasized the power of gnosis, the supposed revealed knowledge of God, to redeem the spiritual element in humankind; they contrasted the supreme remote divine being with the demiurge or creator god, who controlled the world and was antagonistic to all that was purely spiritual. Christ came as an emissary from the supreme god, bringing gnosis. Gnostic teaching for long was known only from anti-heretical writers, such as Irenaeus and Tertullian, until in 1945–6 a collection of Gnostic texts was found in Egypt.

Godard /ˈgɒdɑː(r)/, Jean-Luc (b.1930), French film director. He was one of the leading figures of the nouvelle vague; his films frequently deal with existentialist themes and are notable for their use of improvised dialogue, disjointed narratives, and unconventional shooting and cutting techniques. In addition to his more commercial works, such as Breathless (1960), Alphaville (1965), and Slow Motion (1980), he has also explored the use of film for more overtly political purposes, for example in Wind from the East (1969).

godparent /ˈgɒdˌpeərənt/ n. a person who presents a child at baptism and responds on the child's behalf.

God Save the King (or Queen) the British national anthem. The origins of both words and tune are obscure: the phrase 'God save the king' occurs in various passages in the Old Testament, while as early as 1545 it was a watchword in the navy, with 'long to reign over us' as a countersign. Evidence points to a 17th-century origin for the complete words and tune of the anthem.

Godunov /ˈgɒdʊˌnɒf/, Boris (1550–1605), tsar of Russia 1598–1605. He rose to prominence as a counsellor of Ivan the Terrible and eventually succeeded Ivan's son as tsar. His reign was overshadowed by famine, doubts over his involvement in the earlier death of Ivan's eldest son, and the appearance of a pretender, the so-called False Dmitri. Godunov died suddenly while his army was resisting an invasion by the pretender. He has been made famous outside Russia by Mussorgsky's opera Boris Godunov.

Godwin /ˈgɒdwɪn/, William (1756–1836), English social philosopher and novelist. At first a dissenting minister, he subsequently became an atheist and expounded theories of anarchic social organization based on a belief in the goodness of human reason and on his doctrine of extreme individualism. His ideological novel Caleb Williams (1794), which exposes the tyranny exercised by the ruling classes, was an early example of the crime and detection novel. In 1797 he married Mary Wollstonecraft; the couple's daughter was Mary Shelley.

Goethe /ˈgɜːtə/, Johann Wolfgang von (1749–1832), German poet, dramatist, and scholar. In his early career he was involved with the Sturm und Drang movement. In 1775 he moved to Weimar (later becoming a close friend of Schiller) and held a number of government posts 1776–86, after which he spent two years in Italy. His writing began to move away from the energy and romanticism of Sturm und Drang and became more measured and classical in style, as in the 'Wilhelm Meister' novels (1796–1829), which are also the prototype of the Bildungsroman. An important figure of the Enlightenment in Germany, his wide-ranging interests included philosophy, physics, and biology; he wrote drama, poetry, novels, ballads, and autobiography, and was also director of Weimar Theatre 1791–1817. His works include the epic drama Götz von Berlichingen (1773), the epistolary novel The Sorrows of Young Werther (1774), and the two-part poetic drama Faust (1808–32), as well as the classical dramas Iphigenia in Tauris (1787) and Tasso (1790).

- Gold has been valued from ancient times for its colour and brightness, rarity, and durability: in normal conditions it does not corrode or tarnish. A transition metal, gold is quite widely distributed in nature but economical extraction is only possible from deposits of the native metal or sulphide ores, or as a by-product of copper and lead mining. In world production of gold South Africa is dominant, although Russia also has considerable resources. Its most important uses are for jewellery and other decorative purposes and to guarantee the value of currency (the use of gold itself for coinage is now limited). It is also used in electrical contacts and (in some countries) as a filling for teeth. The relative purity of gold is measured in carats. The symbol Au is from the Latin word for gold, aurum.

golf /gɒlf/ n. & v. ● n. a game played on a large, open-air course, in which a small hard ball is struck with a club from a tee into each of a series of small cylindrical holes set in the ground. (See note below.) ● v.intr. play golf. □ golf-bag a bag used for carrying golf clubs and balls. golf ball 1 a ball used in golf. 2 colloq. a small ball used in some electric typewriters to carry the type. golf cart 1 a trolley used for carrying clubs in golf. 2 a motorized cart for golfers and equipment. golf club 1 a club used in golf. 2 an association for playing golf. 3 the premises used by a golf club. golf course (or links) the course on which golf is played. [15th-c. Sc.: orig. unkn.]

▪ The aim of golf is to drive the ball into all the holes of a course successively with the fewest possible strokes. A golf course now usually has eighteen (sometimes nine) holes; each hole is set in a smooth green at varying distances from the next hole and separated from it by fairways, rough ground, bunkers, and other hazards. The ball is first driven towards the green, which may be up to 450 m away, and then putted into the hole. A selection of clubs is used depending on the kind of stroke to be played. Golf is played competitively in either of two ways: in stroke play (now the usual arrangement in open championships and professional tournaments, in which four rounds are often played) the total number of strokes taken by each competitor decides the outcome; in match play each hole is competed for individually, the victor being the player or team winning the most holes. Golf is a game of considerable antiquity in Scotland, having been played at least since the 15th century (originally on the common land by the sea), and is now played all over the world.

Goncourt /gɒn'kʊə(r)/, Edmond de (1822–96) and Jules de (1830–70), French novelists and critics. The Goncourt brothers collaborated closely in their writing, originally producing art criticism and social history. They regarded their highly detailed realist novels, such as Germinie Lacerteux (1864) and Madame Gervaisais (1869), as a form of contemporary social history. They also wrote the Journal des Goncourt, a detailed record of cultural life in Paris between 1851 and 1896. In his will Edmond de Goncourt provided for the establishment of the Académie Goncourt, which awards the annual Prix Goncourt for a work of French literature; this continued the tradition of the literary circle that the Goncourt brothers had gathered around them during their lifetime.

Gorbachev /ˌgɔːbəˈtʃɒf/, Mikhail (Sergeevich) (b.1931), Soviet statesman, General Secretary of the Communist Party of the USSR 1985–91 and President 1988–91. He was born in Russia. His foreign policy was notable for bringing about an end to the cold war, largely through arms control negotiations with the West, culminating in the signing of treaties with the US in 1987 and 1991 (see START). Within the USSR he introduced major political, economic, and cultural reforms, including the eventual removal of the Communist Party's monopoly of power and moves towards a market economy (see GLASNOST, PERESTROIKA). He retained power in spite of widespread opposition to his policies, which eventually led to an attempted coup in 1991. Ultimately his wish to retain a centrally controlled union of Soviet states conflicted with the Soviet republics' desire for autonomy and he lost his battle with his chief political opponent, Boris Yeltsin; he resigned in Dec. 1991. He was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1990.

- The Gothic language provides the oldest manuscript evidence for the Germanic language group. It belongs to the East Germanic group and was spoken in the area to the north and west of the Black Sea. The evidence is fragmentary, the main text being part of a Gothic translation of the Greek Bible written in the 4th century by bishop Ulfilas.
- Gothic architecture is characterized by pointed arches, rib vaults, and flying buttresses, all features which had appeared in some late Romanesque buildings, but which when used together gave a new impression of airiness and grace. This was increased by the use of windows far larger than those in Romanesque buildings. Window openings and walls were decorated with elaborate tracery so diverse and distinctive that its variations are frequently used in classifying the different stages of the style. Gothic architecture in England is commonly divided into three stages: Early English, Decorated, and Perpendicular.
